I wouldn't buy anything used if I knew it had been overclocked. Overclocking reduces the lifespan of components; even if they're running fine now whoever buys them might be unpleasantly surprised in the future. I'd pay by component, but not for the graphics board or CPU- it's like accepting a lung transplant from a smoker, or a heart transplant from someone who weighs 400lbs when there are healthy organs available instead. Damaged goods just ain't worth buying.

not so expensive...maybe $300-$400 range.

Also, what Nuke said about overclocking.

So you're selling a USED computer for MORE money than it would cost to build the same thing NEW?

You do realize that value depreciates over time, right?

My computer now (which is a compaq) still works brand new.

Non of that bullshit like Dell were you can't upgrade anything but ram, My baby has a ATi radeon X550 (upgraded from a chip set), New sound card, extra gig of ram, new cd drive, extra pci x8 slot for whatever, 2 more free ram slots, heck I got room for an extra internal HDD.

I just need a new PSU and I can upgrade the fuck out of it.

Processor is a AMD 64 @ 2.0Ghz single core but shit, it's surprisingly fast enough if I can open 2 of the same game at once.

I'd say you would be lucky if you got 200 dollars out of that thing. Computer hardware is cruelly cheap for the last couple of years.

Hey, don't get mad because we tell you what what would be a fair price. You asked for it yourself.

And well, if you know it all so well yourself I don't see why you needed to ask us?

I think the card is worth $70 or less bought around $100 brand new. Card is outdated and its not even being made anymore. It can run hl2 on everything max , doom 3 max , supreme commander max , F.E.A.R but the newer games this card would have a struggle.
