Get drunk as in take alcohol or get to the point where I wouldn't go home to my parents?

The former, I'll drink perhaps 2 glasses of wine in a week...

The latter, everytime there's a party (about once a month)

I'm just a social drinker...and no i'm not about to spit out that old pun.

Goin the pub or the local pool house is like the only things to do round here so i make the most of it.

And since i'm such a lightweight i tend not to feel like shit so much the next morning XD

It's just that I used to drink, and I just got sick of being shitfaced. That was my fault though, because I can drink quite a bit, and didn't really pace myself. I'd end up looking and feeling like shit, and I just couldn't dig that.

Plus, I didn't have much coin back then either, and couldn't believe how much I could ring up on booze.

So now I don't drink too often, if at all.

I don't like how some people (ie. way too many) make alcohol out to be this incredible demon that serves no purpose but to destroy lives and families. Not that anybody has done that in this thread... yet.

Certain people should not drink, just like certain people shouldn't own guns, drive cars, procreate, or even have an opinion. It just depends on the person.

I love alcohol, and it's a great escape. I don't need and never have needed alcohol to feel good. It just enhances good feelings, and it can even be used to soften the blow of stressful situations.

What I do hate is that I drank the equivalent of 5 beers last night, chose not to drink any water before I slept, and I woke up to feeling nauseated. I think my tolerance is down from not drinking as much as I used to. Still, drinking water was a quick fix.

Edit: Nauseous --> nauseated.

I used to claim that I was never going to get drunk. Turns out I'm a liar.

I don't do it often, though... usually I'll have one or two and call it quits, because the few times (less than 10) I've been really fucked up I've regretted getting that way. I've never passed out, and I've never forgotten something that I said or did while drunk, but I have gotten drunk to blindness twice, and it was not a very happy experience. Up until about the sixth drink I'm as happy as can be, after which I swing the other way and start getting more depressed... which leads me to drink more, until someone cuts me off or I become physically unable to drink.

That said, I hold my liquor pretty well. I'm coordinated enough to not fall on my ass right up until I can't see anymore; I've been able to pass myself off as sober despite being plastered on more than one occasion. I've never driven drunk, and I've never gotten drunk when I was alone.

The worst I've ever done was a glass and a half of wine, then a whiskey sour, then a few bottles of Smirnoff Ice, rounded off by 3/4 of a bottle of a wonderful Israeli dessert liqueur called Sabra

(*edit- that was all within the space of an hour; someone timed me). That was my first experience with temporary blindness. I couldn't so much as look at chocolate or oranges for the better part of a month afterwards without getting nauseous. That one's really burned into my memory because I'm pretty sure I would have ended up dead if I hadn't had a few really good friends looking out for me.

So... yeah. I try not to get drunk when I can avoid it, but when I do get drunk it tends to go too far. Which, in turn, is why I avoid getting drunk most of the time. Heavily tipsy to lightly drunk is fun; heavily drunk to shitfaced and beyond is most decidedly not.

I always thought I would never drink and it turned out to be true. For some unexplainable reason, I just don't want to drink; not to say I am not curious but either me or some "instinct" of mine always seems to stop me at the last second several times now.

I used to get drunk at least 2 times a week. I still drink as much as I did then, but over the years I have build up a huge resistention so it's now around once every 2 weeks. I drink around 4-5 nights a week, but I don't get drunk then. I only drink at social occasions, never on my own.

I dont see the point in throwing away my cash just to feel like shit the next day.

Wisdom and moderation.

If you can exercise some level of self-control, there's no reason not to have a drink with your friends every now and then.

Not to say I haven't overdone it before. When I was in India I had 7 glasses of scotch, felt great for a while, but later had projectile vomiting! Even then, I remembered to drink my water before crashing, and didn't have the slightest hangover when I woke up. Actually, I felt great.

Aye, I have never been hungover because I replace the fluids that I lost by urinating all night because ive been drinking beer.

Its just a case of knowing your limit. I know when I need to stop drinking. If I decide that no I want to stay another 2 hours or so I make sure I eat to try and sobar up before having another drink. People that get plastered and have fights give alcohol a bad name.

You are a smart individual. There are just some idiots who don't regard their limits and drink as much as possible, leaving their freinds the difficulty of carrying them home.
