I have tested being on both the giving and the receiving end of anti-aircraft fire. I can say that if you are in a chopper, and a ravenshaw/havoc fires at you, your only chance to survive is to kill them. If you flee they WILL take you down, as they can hit you even when you are far away. Your best bet is to retreat backwards while firing at them, and hope you make them dodge enough to not fire at you.

Doesnt work. Most ppl who use ravenshaw/havoc do it because they are good with that char. All it takes is leading the target a bit...I have even hit a recon bike from halfway across the map. You must kill the sniper, or you will be blown from the sky.

Personally I prefer hiding behind a rock or a building when someone snipes me. After all, it takes like four or five shots to take down a chopper so there's plenty of time to hide.

quote: not when a havoc can blast of 4 shots real quick, reload and chase you for that last shot... He might have a high ROF, but the chopper is fast too. As long as you're smart and don't fly very high up in the sky he'll only be able to hit you twice.
