I just did a google search and found at least 5 results with a working download link for both x64 and x86 versions of the Windows 7 beta on the first page of results (bearing in mind I have it set to 20 results per page). Don't just look at the first 4 or 5 results, obviously they are going to link to the Microsoft site since that was the most popular source for the download.

Also, ROFL at the idea that you want someone to upload the entire Windows 7 beta on their home connection. It would take days to complete!

Tbh I would suggest just waiting for the RC(Release Candidate) it's supposed to come out sometime in April.

I have the windows 7 beta but you cant run anything on it yet and it has a few bugs that's probably why it was removed , it wont be for stable or compatible for a while.

If you're already having computer problems, installing Windows 7, and using it will give you even more.

Actually, tbh the beta is a VERY stable release in my experience, I have never had any issues with it and it has run all the programs I have tried on it without any hiccups. Still, it IS a beta edition, so I am waiting on the RTM version before using it as my primary OS.

You're sick of people tell you to use google? Thats because you make a thread every bloody day with a question that can be answered by reading sites on the first page of google.

I just googled Windows 7 download and I got this on the very first page.

You want people to stop telling you to use google? Google how to use google and we will.

If you really want to, then follow the steps in this page. It has steps for XP, and Vista users, so make sure you follow the right ones.

What I showed you are only directions to install Windows 7 properly. Unfortunately, you will not be able to find it easily without using a torrent because you missed the deadline.

To be honest, I wouldn't worry about running Windows 7 until the actual finished product arrives.

Ehh.. I am using Windows 7 x64 on my main PC, and besides some driver issues with my onboard network card, it worked flawlessly ever since.

I am also using Windows 7 x86 on my Media Center PC. Again, no problems at all except for the onboard network card.

On the network card issue, I forced installed the Vista drivers and it worked. No problems ever since, which is better than Vista RTM.
