It's only for a little while mate! After you finish school, you are a free man (of course assuming you got a nice job!)

We have the "most important exams of the year" next week (8 days from now).

The problem with that though, is that next week is when we GET BACK FROM SPRING BREAK!

I don't get how they expect us to do good on a 3 hour long exam (which isn't just that, but we have to take it 3 hours everyday for 4 or 5 days), right after getting back from a long week of sleeping in and forgetting everything we learned.

Agh....i've got like 8 exams in the summer.

For 3 different subjects.

On the flip side though, it's now practically impossible for me to fail A level maths....i may only have an E with the points i've got so far, but i'm resitting 1 of them, and have 2 exams and coursework left, so can easily bring it up.

You realise the whole point of a break is to give you time to revise and study on your own, right? I know very few students actually USE it for that, but that's your own fault if you don't use the time as it was intended to be used.

I got the same exams heh (E&M profiel).

Imo History is easy. I still haven't learned yet, but I will probably start with it this week. The 4 wars are pretty easy (Coalitie-Oorlogen, Krim-Oorlog, Frans-Duitse Oorlog en Eerste Wereldoorlog), but "Dynamiek en stagnatie in de republiek" is boring.

I also still have to learn for Economics and Maths :\

I like school. Taking advantage of all the possibilities of getting a higher education is the least I could do, considering public education is freely provided to me. Anyone who really complains needs to realize that in a few years their entire life will be determined by the education they get.

Yeah, I don't know what the situation in the USA is, but over here in the higher regions of education your future career will only be determined by your degree for as little as 10%. A high degree helps at your first job interview, for sure. But after you get that first job, it's going to be mostly about the experience you build and the things you achieve, they are vastly more important than your degree. At least, this is how it works in the business sector of the job market. In the 4 years it takes to complete your degree you will probably learn as much as you learn in your first year of actually having a job in the sector you studied for. I'm not saying a degree isn't needed, ofcourse it is, however it is not the sole factor that will determine your future prospects.

Yeah, unless the degree is highly specialized for something like the sciences, it usually just means you're a competent individual who can grasp new concepts relatively quickly, can put up with deadlines, and deal with bullshit.
