I play if I have a LIVE Gold account active. I don't like paying for LIVE, I don't think it is worth it.

However, I do from time to time subscribe. In which case, my gamertag is as it is everywhere else: R315r4z0r.

Whoah man, R3, I checked you up too, you and I got a lot of Halo 3 achievements on the same days...

I'm AmazingDuude67, but I rarely play Halo anymore. I've been doing Left 4 Dead and HL2 every other day, but on Friday I got red rings of death, so I won't be on for a while ;_;

i used to have problems with lag too so i didn't bother playing halo...but then i set my firewall to open and changed my matchmaking settings from quickest to most lag-free, now i don't usually have any problems...though there are still people that stand-by ...which is the gayest thing ever and i think should get you banned

I play it once in awhile, but only with my closest friends.
The only reason I play it because they play it. I hate the fact that it takes forever to kill someone.

Right now I am mostly waiting until all maps for Left 4 dead are available for versus (hopefully soon), then I might be on-line a bit more.

takes too long to kill someone? the only gun that "takes a long time" to kill someone with is the autorifle at full range, or the magnum but seriously that's a given...other than that halo is probably the fastest paced shooter in all of online console gaming...combined with the microphone that everyones given with their xbox...its really sweet, all the team work and call out spots involved...halo is really great with coordination, especially when you get to higher levels

I thought that Unreal Tournament is the fastest paced console and PC shooter.

As for the length it takes to kill someone, 5 bursts from battle rifle to kill someone seems way too long for me.

Three quarters of assault rifle clip to kill seems too long as well.

It's only four bursts. That's like literally 3 seconds if you connect on every burst.

Melee + 1 burst to the head = death.

Longer life expectancy is a given because of the science behind the energy shields built into the combat suits.

If you play campaign, you would find that it takes a very small amount of damage to kill something without an energy shield. (i.e. grunts, jackles, ect)

You can't kill people with a BR in 2 bursts (full shield).

The minimum would be 3-4 bursts.

Actually you have to hit them three times in a row, and then one shot in the head. If you don't hit the last shot in the head the lowest you can kill them in is 5-6 shots.

Actually it can be done with 3. But that is the real minimum. One of my best friends usually does this when he gets a BR in his hands
3 bursts in the head and you die

ok considering i've played so many games and never once seen this before, but im sure some random guy on renforums whos only probably played one time at his grandmas house before knows that its possible to kill people in two shots by pressing two buttons at the same time that would make you melee and y doesn't even do anything, probably makes you shoot 10x faster ...right

Yea, it's called double shooting (afaik), and it is considered cheating and an exploit.

Its a bootable offense in most games. It doesn't show skill, it just shows you like to cheat people out of playing a fair game. (Especially the people who KNOW how to do it, but chose NOT to.)

Well... then you don't play the game enough. I rarely play it and it is very possible to do.

So much that even Bungie made it a point to make an official announcement saying anyone caught doing it would be suspended.

However, it's more common in Halo 2 than 3.

Also, it doesn't change the power behind the shots that hit you, it changes the rate of fire. It basically gives the effect/illusion that the Battle Rifle is full auto.
