Saw it yesterday. Amazing voice from a completely unassuming person.

It's funny how everyone was laughing at her before she began singing.

Little do people know that one's appearance has little to do with how they sound.

Fobby! It's funny how everyone was laughing at her before she began singing.

Little do people know that one's appearance has little to do with how they sound.

I don't think that's why everybody doubted her so much. It certainly was a part of it, but how she acted with her quirky gestures and (what was thought to be) illusions of grandeur was what really put the thought of William Hung in my mind. Amazingly, she has proven to be every bit as talented as the singers she wants to be on the same level as.

Her singing was incredible, and proves once again that not every musician today has to look like a fucking supermodel to be successful. She has a great voice, and that's all you should need.
