Use compatibility mode on the setup/install.exe then it should install after that patch up the games with the winxp patch.

For online/lan play visit ->

I tried that but when I run the setup on the C&C Red Alert disk it launches and then says "This game is not for windows 2000" or something like that. I thought that there was some kind of patch.

Hmmm what I just did was set the setup to compatibility to windows 98 and then run the setup with admin rights. That did the trick for me.

I have a 32 meg installer from a RA website that installs Red Alert + Counterstrike + Aftermath. Works for XP.

Thing is, even though you own the game, giving it out might be considered "warez" here.

Can someone enlighten me?

That's basically what I have, except it isn't as small.
You should be good to go with that

If anyone wants my 32 meg version, PM me with your email.
I'll send it along, since it seems to be OK since it's been released.

If you have CD's... maybe use this?
