This looks like you set the number of players beyond what is reachable with your bandwidth, so if you could give the number of players that you set the server on, and the bandwidth, then we can take a look.Hmm, that didn't look like normal English, ahh, well, I don't care.

That is a server running 24hours a day (normally then) and where the host isn't in the game.

Well, Actually, a dedicated server is a server (D'uh!) that is created on a comp, on wich the host doesnt play. He does'nt even sees what's going on (graphic, but I think he can read all the messages with the server console) that way, All the CPU is used to run the server, and no CPU is spent for graphics. This makes the server more stable...

I have put up a dedicated server and played on it as well... You have to have a different WOL sign in name, and then logon to your server... it works great for me at least.
