Want the edge on your n00bie opponents? Want to fly around like you're c0ck of the walk? Since I'm a beta tester (Not trying to sound arrogant and stuff) and have had a bit more time with these suckers than you d00ds have, I'll share some of my best strategies. Tank Buster (C&C_City_Flying ; C&C_Walls_Flying) When flying your aircraft, you may happen to spot the occasional enemy tank. When you do, my advice is to fire with your 30mm\20mm chain gun. Open up on that SOB like there's no tommorow. Keep locked on the tank and strafe side to side and up and down. When the tank is almost dead and you don't feel like tangling with an infantry unit, fly down very low on TOP of the tank and keep firing at it. Keep pressing the C button while you do this. Once the tank blows up, the infantry unit is squished. My favorite comment to go along with that is: "SMOOSHED J00!" Structure Assault (C&C_Walls_Flying) Now, Walls is non-base defense map. The best thing you can do is a small strike against the enemy base. I'll use GDI as an example. First, buy an Orca. Fly it and KEEP LOW. No matter what, KEEP LOW. Fly LOW around the center portion of the map, do NOT go above it unless you want snipers\Raveshaw to catch you or want to tangle with enemy aircraft prematurely. Fly into the large notch on either side of the large wall defending the Nod base. Once you do that, you have free access to the base for a limited amount of time. Hit the Airstrip's control tower first. Fire missiles at it and move fast, jink (using control and the side to side movement keys to strafe left or right, while doing all sorts of evasive maneuvers) often, and continue to keep the airstrip in your sights, moving down the runway, ascend, and descend again as you fly down the runway, firing your missiles at the runway and control tower. Once you've been shot up enough to the point of where you have 160 health points left, ascend, fly above the Nod wall, and descend as you haul ass past the center portion of the map. Return to your base and get repaired. Keep repeating if you are not under assault. Dogfighting (C&C_Walls_Flying ; C&C_City_Flying) I think this pretty much explains itself. When confronted with numerous enemy aircraft, the best thing you can do is raise your altitude and attempt to gain the tactical advantage over them. Fire your cannon and continue to hit them until you can't hit them anymore with it. Then, as your armour starts to decrease from being pounded by a combination of missiles, cannon fire, and whatever else is thrown at you, turn around (make sure you have "Camera locked to turret" activated in the options screen) and aim at the nearest helicopter. Fire on it with your cannons. You WILL hit it, regardless of if you believe you will or not. Keep firing at the pursuing aircraft until you can reach your base and land for repairs. Repeat as many times as necessary. Shooting backwards is the most effective way to hit an enemy aircraft with your aircraft. Those are just a few of my strategies... I ain't giving them all away. Man... I laught at the people who don't lock camera to turret and can't turn around.. in this case, you literally do circles around them! and as long as you stay behind them.. you're not touched...

The best tactic is on walls. When you are Nod, and everyone has bought a helicopter, despite you saying "BUY TANKS" buy a stealth tank and nip into the GDI base, which is undefended because they all have copters. There is a point on the power plant where you are hidden from view by the chimney and the walls. Sit there, uncloak and blast away. Using this tactic, against a really stupid team, I destroyed their barracks and the power plant, without either one being repaired, or me being attacked.

and i like to add that when your a transport pilot -- skim over the tops of buildings so your pax can jump out --if your Nod - you can drop off the stealths as you go into the base and GDI will follow you as you go into the base ---nice little diversion..... nicer if all three drop nukes....Muhahahaha

Heh the very first time I played walls-flying, I used the "notch" technique. I flew low too...it just seemed the natural thing to do...flying low to avoid the hovering enemy aircraft from seeing me come in. I went through the notch, landed on the HoN, planted a beacon and then flew to the PP and blew it, and THEN I got the airstrip down to 1 red bar before they got me

Finer Points Of The Apachel's most important to fire backwards with an Apache. The 30mm gun is mounted on the bottom of the nose just as it is in real life. That makes it impossible to fire ahead without tearing the nose apart. So, when you move, this is what the Apache looks like, very, very roughly: \It's inclined forward, which makes it even harder to fire to the front of you. You're more likely to hit the ground than anything else at this point. If you pull back, you will fire forward. BUT, if you turn around, lift up as not to get pounded so badly, and fire BACKWARDS like I've said before, the cannon has A RANGE THAT REACHES UP TO THE AIRCRAFT HEIGHT LIMIT NO MATTER WHAT. This makes you a very formidable opponent and also allows you to escape by just pressing forward, instead of having to swing around and take more damage.

1wordDUMBASSUse rockets against tanks, they have heavy armor which protects them from steel, shells do more against tanks. Use chainguns against mobile art, MRLS, and humvee.If it had a stealth pistol it'd sitll only win, tank guns can't aim straight up.Those are not tactics, thats common sense.

I can imagine him shooting his little stealth pistol at a Med Tank for 25 minutes, getting it to a sliver of health, and then getting nailed by the guard tower because he didn't notice the tank heading back to base.

Chainguns hurt heavy armour? LOLBS mate. They do about half the damage of a flamethrower against heavy armour, round about 7 damage per second.As for light-armour killing - the chaingun is crap at this too - they do even less damage than the normal rifle against light armour.Na, chaingun officers are just for anti personell, and terrible against light armour.
