That's not the harder side of hardcore tbh. I know it's harder than UK hardcore, but it's def not the harder side of hardcore. Search for Tieum, Tapage, Ophidian etc. if you want the hard side of hardcore.

OP: Techno is a way too big term to reccomend you something, you need to be a bit more specific in what you want. As in; hard/soft, high BPM/low BPM, melodic/loops, dark/happy etc etc.

Your mixing could be a lot better. Also, ~30 tracks in 10 min sounds so horrible, you should at least grab a bit of the intro and outro on every track you play. So in a 10 min mix you should fit in 4 tracks MAX, 3 or 2 would be best.

It's usually the difference in BPM (beats per minute), the hardness of the kick and the use of melodies and/or loops. Like trance usually has a BPM of around 130, a really soft and dense bassdrum and stretched out qlimax-like melodies. Hardcore on the other hand has a BPM of around 180, hard and distorted kicks and differs per song wether it uses either screeches, a nasty synth melody or sometimes simple loops. There are shitloads of different genre's like this in techno music.

Nobody understands techno - except ravers, which is a group of superweirdos nobody should associate with. Do you really want to know how you can put 60 GB of music into 324234 sub-categories? Just enjoy the tracks that are currently poppin in the clubs (mostly electro & house anyway) and stop trying to understand the 34234324 sub-categories idiotic ravers have made up.

Yeah, because the stuff they play in clubs is good... The best techno tracks are usually pretty hard to find. Knowing what kind of techno you actually like is pretty handy.

Oh well, not my cup of tea, but I believe it's still easier to find out which artists you actually like and start from there instead of trying to figure out the categories - there are just too many and they're confusing to 99% of the population .

edit - ok i am completely mystified at how 99 percent of the shit on that techno.org site is terrible, so never mind what i said earlier, i dont know what's worse... probably still t-pain though.

depends on which day of the week it is...most of the time it's a mix of house, electro and t-wayne...black music is less common in the more upscale clubs, but you can choose to go to the :-() club where that's all they play...only black/hispanic/wigger military and fat white broads hoping to get knocked up go there, tho.. ;\

Combichrist are pretty awesome, although they're Aggrotech. But I've raved to them before at my favourite Goth nightclub.

Yes I'm a strange person

i think shuffle is the coolest cause it looks really funny and the music for it (hardstyle) is cool too xD

Pretty good TL. I'll give it a listen. Just hate the scrap attack track, retarded vocals... Well, at least it's better than the original.

Oh, and to the guy that said shuffle is cool; go die in a fire.

It's pretty good. Not a lot of mistakes really, haven't found any beatmatching mistakes either. Good playtime for the tracks, picked out the right parts. Just personally I'd say lay off the flangers lol. Also like the pitching. Reminded me a lot of the Endymion set @ thunderdome 2008, which is not a bad thing at all. Too bad you didn't also finish with Tommyknocker & The Stunned Guys - Your Choice; god I love that track. But anyway, good set, I might just burn this on cd.

DJM 400 effects panel is too tempting

also used some echo in certain parts, i think it was in the break of Dont be fuckin' with my shit lol

Well I don't mind some echo. But flangers always sound pretty amateurish to me.
