Most of it pretty much sucks. Nirvana was damn overrated, honestly.

A few decent bands have come out of the 90's, but they didn't get too popular until 2000+. Really, people who say the 90's were good, are retarded. They clearly don't remember boy bands, the utter death of decent rock, the emergence of hip hop, rap rising then dying almost immediately, emo music emerging, and so on.

If you're referring to my post, I said the emergence of it.

The rise and death of rap is referring to when rap was semi-decent. Then it turned into stupid bullshit and combined with hip hop.

Rap has always been part of Hip Hop culture...how the fuck did they recently combine? Most 90s rap is unlistenable nowadays as the production is so bad, but what would you know about that...

What's wrong with using a computer as an instrument? There are no good or bad genres, there's just good music. Coldplay makes good music, but so does Kanye West.

Agreed.

I actually listen to a lot of post-2000 rock. I know it's not as good as it could be, but I'm not a fan of the old school rock that a lot of people are into nowadays, as I always thought they sounded bland and uninteresting.

These days I'm listening to Avenged Sevenfold, Break Benjamin, Rise Against, Taproot, Alexisonfire, Sevendust, etc. But a few years ago I was listening to Linkin Park, Sum 41, Jimmy Eat World, and some others.

And yeah I don't listen to rap or hip hop either, though it seems that's all that's on the radio and parties these days.

Yeah. I'm loving Breaking Benjamin's new album "Dear Agony", and I'm very patiently awaiting the new Avenged Sevenfold, Sevendust, Sum 41, Linkin Park, and (I think) Taproot albums that should all be coming out early 2010.

As for the 90s, Foo Fighters were alright. I liked a few of their songs, but as some mentioned earlier, 90s rock and grunge all really sounded similar. Let's not forget that the 90s were dominated by boy bands like the Backstreet Boys, N'Sync, 98 degrees, Hanson (oh god I hate them), some "girl bands" like the Spice Girls and Destiny's Child (I think they were 90s?), and others like Britney Spears and Christina Aguleira.

Overall the 90s were a pretty sad period in music history. Otherwise though it was a pretty good decade.

i dont like grunge (the style), but some bands made a few good songs.

i started in the early 80`s with metal.. judas priest, running wild, accept, iron maiden, axel rudi pell, helloween and so on...

there are so many genres of metal. some of them sounds weird (imo) and some are really great (again imo).

i like epic-metal, melodic-metal, power-metal and symphonic metal. and most of them came in the 90`s. like: rhapsody (rhapsody of fire, now), freedom call, stratovarius, sabaton, kamelot, heavenly nightwish, epica, sirenia, within temptation, rammstein and many more...

every music genre has his good and bad sides, its more the acceptance of the listener and how he handle it.

i.e.: a rapper dont like metal (mostly). but what is if a metalband mix rap and metal? like faith no more. they have a few songs which are metal but have some rap elements in it.
or the opposite: p. diddy.. many metallers liked his song: come with me (godzilla soundtrack).

as i started with renegade music videos, i had a big problem: which music should i use for my vids?
i decided to make the vids with metal and trance. i have many vid watchers who dont like metal, but they still watch my vids, and many of them got another opinion about metal.

metal isn't only a sick musicversion, where ppls only headbang and sounds like they puke over the microphone. you only have to listen the right style.

greetz telly ^^

I used to be a huge Linkin Park fan, but there's too much space between their albums to stick with them. Meteora was great, but let's just say Minutes to Midnight wasn't worth the four year wait, and almost three years later they're just coming out with a "concept album".

This.

I kinda liked their style, but their lyrics were awful.

Still, in comparison to most emo music nowadays, it's still much higher quality and the vocals aren't nearly as bad... which is pretty sad.

The songs were okay, but way too mainstream, and they lacked a lot of what made them popular in the first place. With exception to Bleed it Out (which I didn't like), they seemed to have completely abandoned their nu-metal/rap mix.

The last two music albums I liked that were fairly recent would be Rise Against's "Appeal to Reason" and Breaking Benjamin's "Dear Agony". I'm still waiting on a lot of new albums in the coming months, but it looks like rock is at a low these days.

I happen to think that much of the music that Linkin Park makes isn't particularly "emo."

I think a lot of it is reverse psychological. And it's actually very clever if you want to talk revenue.

I remember that a lot of people used to comment on Linkin Park songs (particularly drunk "hipster" females) saying that their songs reflected their own life.

I don't think that the music that Linkin Park makes is directly reflective of any of the members of the band, to a degree, but rather they are trying to connect to the audience saying "you're problems are real, so you aren't alone."

I see their music as very motivational in a psychological sort of way.

I didn't say it's all based around skill, I said it is largely based on taste, and that skill (or uniqueness) can be a topic of discussion.

Cool song though.

You can't have a discussion based on taste, because it always goes like this:

Prima: I like X

Secunda: That band sucks. I like Y

Prima: That band sucks. I like Z

Secunda: That band sucks. I like...

Similarly, "uniqueness" isn't an appreciable or particularly relevant quality, since something can be unique and be terrible in its uniqueness.

That leaves skill. I've posted some Dream Theater, so for all intents and purposes the discussion is over.

I think skill and artistic flow also come into play. It doesn't have to have 57357397593759379 notes to be good. That being said, shitty lyrical bands need to stop. I'm tired of almost all music being centered around (usually shitty) lyrics.

And therein lies the difference between what I posted and what so we all say posted, the difference between Prog and shitty mathcore.

You would have me believe there's no accounting for taste, but there is.

In any case, it doesn't really matter if you enjoy it or not. You can't kill the Metal.

They're OK, if only because I've had to listen to them in the car since I was little. I prefer 'Waterloo' myself, especially when covered.

Yeah, it's awesome. Some songs I can't stand, but a few are real fun to crank up.

On another note: the lack of Leonard Cohen is disappointing.

Electronic,techno,hardstyle etc. music dosent need any musical skills to make it. You just get any better music maker and put samples in, all the theory. While you have to get some music knowledge in practice in theory to make Rock,Rap,Any pop,Reggae,classic,Country,Folk,funk etc..
