Sorry this is kind of redundant, but is there anyway to transfer my saved westwood logins/passwords from one computer to another? Has anyone every just moved the whole folder and have it work?

Just type your username and password in on the new computer, the accounts exist on the XWIS server, not on your hard drive.

And no, moving the folder wouldn't work as they are not stored there in the first place, your saved usernames are in the registry.

Well my old computer automatically remembers the passwords for each account so some of it is saved on that computer.(I assume)

But thx, i didnt think there was a way

If you save the registry settings on the old computer and apply them to the new computer it at least saves the names, but I'm not sure about the passwords

It is. There's no reason why you'd need to copy that unless you forgot your password and refuse to reset it as explained in the sticky.

There is just a strange bug that if I tell it to auto login on a given account it says the password is wrong and wont let me long in on it. But if i dont auto login if asks for the password everytime and it logins me in fine. Just dont want to hassle with entering the password everytime

You need to run it in admin mode for it to remember the correct password.
