Anyone in America not wanting this bill to be passed? I find it to be a large hindrance on the population. It's not like the taxpayers pay for the lifestyles of people who "can't afford to live"... oh wait, that's right, we do.

A large hindrance on the population? I think tens of millions of people not having access to health services is a larger hindrance on the population on the whole, socially.

If you're worried about a financial burden, then pressure your officials to plug up the loop holes that allow the top percentile of income owners to ferry out their taxable income to 'haven's'.

I'd like accessible healthcare as much as the next guy, but the way it's going to be implemented is all wrong. Obama & co don't really know what the fuck they're doing :\

Given the options presented, and the fact that his opposition aren't even willing to co-operate on matters, he's going with the best implementation available.

At least he's keeping a campaign promise, and sticking to it. If it fails, well it fails. I'm no fan of Obama, but I'm impressed that he's been so vigorously pushing this initiative. I can't remember the last time I've seen a politician actually keep such a 'hard' promise and persevere. It's one thing to promise tax cuts and proceed with them, but its another when it comes to promise something that will shape the country.

The problem is he's been in a position where he could easily get it through, but hasn't. It's like he's trying to get more people to like it, yet the more he tries to campaign for it (lol), the more people seem to hate it.

also, the opposition is willing to try and talk out a compromise, but he pretty much will only listen to stuff that agrees with him; everything else is shot down and ignored...

plus, given America's track record, I don't think giving more power to the government is such a great idea.

He's been trying to cater to people on all sides of the spectrum because he's been trying to present himself as a bi-partisan politician. Yes, he could ram it through, but then the Republican party and independents would view it as a liberal, socialist, unionist ploy to expand government. I suppose that attitude hasn't really changed, but you can't blame him for trying.

Frankly, I can't blame him for giving up on a compromise with the right/right-of-center because the rhetoric by those in the 'tea parties' and on talk radio is so toxic, and unproductive. When you've got people in crowds calling Obama some really bad things, and likening health care to Armageddon, you know it's not worth your time to negotiate with them. Obama's put out an olive branch, and kept it there, seeking moderation in the debate. But instead of sitting down to talk, they're just screaming louder and louder, likening his overtures as being indecisive.

As for the big government argument. Yes it's true that health care will expand government's reach. But here's the thing that confuses me - why isn't Glenn Beck crying about the ginormous reach that Bush gave the US government after Sept. 11th? Forget the bailouts, and other initiatives, and just look at the new Department of Homeland security, and the increased jurisdiction of other agencies; those likely intrude into people's lives more than health care.

Yes preventing terrorism is important. But what's more dangerous to America? A nutjob who thinks he's really damaging the 'Great Satan' or a previously middle class family that is facing bankruptcy because they're paying bills for health care?

Honestly, the whole problem the media had with Bush is the fact that he is Republican. The media is (for the most part) democratic sympathizing. There are a few exception, but they're rare.

Bush is much brighter than most people say he is. I recall hearing estimates pegging him at an IQ of 125'ish; I'm inclined to agree, after what I've read about him. That also means he's 15 IQ points higher than me.

But hating on Dubya is a European pastime anyways. It's what all the cool kids like to do.

Doubt it. Fox News is the most watched network in the US. MSNBC, which is pretty skewed to the center-left is in second place. The so-called 'Clinton News Network' was dead last in viewership last I checked.

What's up with everyone knowing their IQ scores? I've always scored somewhere in the top 10% online, but never cared enough to go through with a real one. You can only measure one of many pillars of intelligence with those types of questions anyway. My underachieving, pot-smoking cousin likes to talk about how he has a supposed genius IQ, but he's one of the easiest people to manipulate and has never impressed me with intellectual insight.

Nikki, these neocon libertarians (I don't even know what to call them, because their philosophy is so contradictory) think that the only thing government has to do is protect our freedomz (most importantly safety)...and of course Christian values. I hope the US gets pinko medicine sooner than later. Even a mismanaged program will be better than the ss/medicare/medicaid clusterfuck we're currently subjected to.

I got mine assessed when I was in university. A science department needed IQ scores for a survey and since they had muffins, I was game.

Well that's why I don't understand these 'tea-partiers.' They argue that government shouldn't stick their nose into everyone's business, which is a fair argument to make... but they don't go after the agencies that are actually eroding their freedoms in the name of protecting freedoms. Nor are they having rallies outside of the Dept. Homeland Security or the Pentagon, both of which spend huge amounts of government cash for what are in many cases some very dubious returns.

They've had a majority in both houses. However, they were making the mistake of trying to pass their bill through normal legislative means, which requires a 60-40 majority to get anything done if the minority party decides to be difficult and filibuster. After they lost their 60-40 senate majority after Ted Kennedy's death, they turned a process called reconciliation which doesn't allow filibustering and only requires a 51-49 majority to get the bill through. It's less-than-honest, but they can't say they didn't try, and Republicans didn't leave them with much choice.

So what does happen if an uninsured person has an accident, and an emergency ambulance is called? What if it was a broken leg, for instance. Do the EMTs walk away if the patient cannot pay? (I suggest a broken leg because you're likely to be concious and thus discussions pertaining to payment could take place)

I CBA to look it up.

Generally speaking, hospitals are legally obligated to treat a person regardless of their ability to pay. The cost is then either billed to the recipient of the treatment, or passed on to people who pay insurance to the providers who own the hospitals.

It'll save your government a lot of money over the years, and people will get the health coverage they need.

One important aspect is that small businesses will get incentives to buy health plans for their employees which should help attract people, and also lower the cost of operation for those that do offer health as a perk.

No, it's not perfect, but it's better than what was before, especially in regards to preventative care. It means Wendy Welfare Mom and Joe Subdivision won't refuse going to the doctor when they have a bad sore throat, instead of waiting until they get pneumonia. That's not only good for society, but the economy too.

Perhaps you might have missed this since you're in Norway, but this process has taken us a year and a half, and the entire time Republicans have been telling us the earth will split in two and demons will come out of hell to rule the world if this bill is passed.

The whole health care bill is basically;

- 1) Insurance companies can't do bullshit like randomly drop customers or cap benefits.
- 2) Uninsured/Uninsurable can join high risk pools.
- 3) $250 for pills to seniors not covered under medicare part B. $250 for pills is nothing.

Really? Really, Republicans?

nikki6ixx wrote on Tue, 23 March 2010 13:09No, it's not perfect, but it's better than what was before

It's kind of hard not to be better than what was before. I realize it's a step in the right direction, but it's maddening to think so much effort has gone to something so seemingly small.

- 1) Insurance companies can't do bullshit like randomly drop customers or cap benefits.
- 2) Uninsured/Uninsurable can join high risk pools.
- 3) $250 for pills to seniors not covered under medicare part B. $250 for pills is nothing.

Really? Really, Republicans?

Ive heard some about it, but not that i took so long time, but ive seen how it went, so maybe, just maybe, there will be some more changes by the years.

And shit $250 for pills? Seriously, if i, for example need pills or any other stuff, vital to me, its mostly free here. Pills Here!

Norway sits on a lot of oil and has a rather homogenous, small society...comparing countries like that to the US doesn't help. Regardless, God will send hurricanes and plagues to America for this socialist transgression.

Let me ask you something, if I called you a "city-dog knifing slumliving disrespecting racist sack of trash", would you not be A. offended or B. saying "RACIST! "? I am not saying that you are any of the above listed, but your words, for some reason, scream RACIST AND IGNORANT.

Edit:Also, not all Republicans are even of the christian faith. I know plenty of Jewish Republicans.

Also, limiting the guns people can have MIGHT be a good movement, but if you look at states with low gun-crime rates like Texas, there are laws where you can shoot people if they point a gun at you. So long as you don't shoot to kill.
