Cosplay cafes originated in Japan. Basically, a cosplay cafe is a cafe in which the waitresses (usually) dress up in cute/attractive costumes in order to draw customers into the restaurant.

We already have those. I believe they go by the name "Hooters".

In the cosplay cafe version of "Hooters" the waitresses actually dress up in owl costumes.

As well as the fact that almost all of them are going to fail.

It would be an interesting change of pace.

They're quite different, a majority of the time.
There are those who overlap, but it's the same with gamers & anime fans, as well as gamers & furies.

Gamers, Otaku and Furrries; while each are totally different, they are three parts of one whole.
You can compare their similarities to that of Star Wars and Star Trek fans.

It'd be more accurate to say Star Wars fans and Lord of the Rings fans, since Star Wars is little more than LotR in space.
