Yes, as much you're boosting the activity stats, this is getting annoying. Make a container topic please.

If you don't have anything constructive to say, DO NOT POST.

This is not complex, and is a direct translation of IRL manners, so therefore I must either conclude you're all incredibly rude, or are trolling.

Either way, this is not cool. All responsible will now get formal warnings. (And I'll lose twenty minutes of my life)

To the user posting as "Anon"
I cannot send this via PM
Hello

This is an official warning, the first on your record.

Please do not post unless you have something constructive to say!

20 minutes? Thats more time than what renalpha spent on that track...

seriously renalpha, stop shitting out tracks. Thats my constructive criticism.

also, post your tracks on music forums, where people are actually able to criticize your tracks properly. You're not gonna get any better by posting your shit on renforums...

Creating threads like this should be a bannable offense.

This is acceptable criticism. Random oversized smileys are not.

This one is a little bit more bearable than your last efforts. It's not flat out spectacularly bad, but it's not too crash hot either.

If it's what you like doing, then by all means keep doing it.

I find it odd how the smallest of activity in a largely non-active forum gets flamed to hell every single time.

After consecutive threads, you'd think you might learn that RenAlpha's music does not appeal to you. Why click on the thread? Why listen to the track? Why waste the time?

Ye, that's really constructive. He can get better if you actually say what do and do not like specifically about the music. Constructive criticism isn't "Hey dude, your music is shit".

Constructive criticism is "Hey, I didn't like that track, but what you could of done better is:.... etc"

I can't see the harm in posting the music in non-music forums. Sure theres more chance of getting some 'expert' advice from fellow artists; yet most of the members are just fans of the genre; people you'd find anywhere.

It doesn't sound bad, at all.

However, it doesn't sound unique either.

lol I wouldn't take criticism from a hands up-listener^^^ real serious...

If we take "stop shitting out tracks" (especially given the joke made at renalpha's expense on the previous line) as a suggestion to spend more time, I'd call that constructive. Also the advice to go to a music forum (where technical advice will be much more readily available) is good.

Finally, that's about as nice as the internet gets.
