Thanks but i fear that this Trojan could get me banned from servers or im being too dramatic.

EDIT: is there a way i can send my game.exe to AVG? like Jonwil did?

EDIT2: Ok AVG scanned my laptop and picked up the threat, now its moved to the virus vault.

Does it Guarantee that the virus wont hinder with the game.exe?

EDIT3: I just ran the program and the virus never popped up (yay) but however it cannot find the game.exe

Actually the other one is RenegadeServer.exe not Renegade.exe, there is a difference, I have yet to see Renegade.exe flag on any of my computer's antiviruses (Norton/Symantec/WindowsDefender).

Sounds like some AV programs added a new detection that's reading Renegade exe's as a virus. I'm sure it's fine, just a false positive.

You don't need renegade.exe, it doesnt DO anything except load game.exe. Just delete it and edit your shortcuts to point to game.exe instead.

Personally I still think its a false positive due to AV companies assuming any program which exists solely to launch another program must be malware.

Use Virustotal if you are unsure if your virusscanner is telling the truth. <http://www.virustotal.com>

I scanned it and it said that 5 of the 43 virusscanner think it is a virus.

If Norton, mcafee and Microsoft's scanner would determine it to be a virus then I would start getting worried.

In this case Avg is 1 of the 4 others in which the 4 others are kinda mediocore scanners.

I had the same problem this weekend... AVG says my Renegade.exe was a trojan, then moved it to the virus vault. I've just been using Game2 in the meantime

It's probably a false positive, I've had this happen before with my games. Just have AVG ignore the file and don't send it to the vault.

Just set it on the ignore list and don't send it to the vault (or you'll have to re-install)...

Why? I did it 5 hours ago and Ren still works for me.

This may be unrelated, but anyone else get a "missing mss32.dll" error recently?

I restored Renegade.exe so it isn't that.

And yes, I downloaded mss32.dll but that just gives me some exception error with it.

mss32 is the Miles Sound System library used for the Miles 2D Positional Sound sound system in Renegade. There is more than one version of the dll, so chances are any random version you get from the internet will not be the right one. Assuming the copy Mi-28 Havoc posted above this is from Renegade it should work properly.

Miles is actually a source-only library so that risk is considerably greater as the developers compiles Miles themselves and are bound to have different compiler settings.

I'm just going to reinstall.

I use AVG, is it possible to add Renegade.exe to an exception list? It's 'warned' me about 20 times today.

Yea just recently my avg detected a trojan downloader.amdm or something rather from Game.exe, and it didnt really scare me until it said my system restore has also been infected with the same trojan and it couldn't heal any of them , only remove. So i removed all threats , and hoping it doesn't come back. The fact it was in my system restore in 3 different points tells me it probably isn't a false alarm. Since i got rid of it though i haven't had any problems, so it very well could have just been a strange error avg was getting.

Yeap that explains why my AVG went haywire last night with 10 viruses it "suposingly" it found.

Anyways. Shall i just reinstall my laptop? im kind getting sick of these constent 'apparent' trojans and install a new Anti virus?
