I don't know about advertised... but I do know that the majority of the advertisements are for a Black Ops themed Jeep... so that might explain it's excessive advertisements (cause there are already a lot of car commercials as it is, tying a video game into one of them means that game gets advertised a lot too).

But it has been recorded as the fastest selling game in history.

yeah, I think. It was the commercial about a guy getting pulled over late at night but he is bragging about how he jacked a Hind attack chopper. gosh I should have seen it a hundrend times already lol. wth...the only reason is because this is the first time I have seen a computer game been this heavily and virally advertised on almost every channel.

btw, I read in my Time magazine that despite the shit economy, video games and consoles have and are doing very well.

It was once a respectable franchise. Everything before CoD 3 (lol) was pretty impressive, and MW 1 was not-awful. It's just a victim of it's own fame, and is now being milked. As a C&C-game community, I think this is something people here should be able to sympathize with.

I don't think C&C fans can necessarily sympathise with CoD. The reason being is that despite the milking of CoD, it is still EXTREMELY successful.

C&C at the moment, however, is pretty dead. Everytime a new C&C game comes out, it's medeocre at best.

If anything, C&C fans should be jealous of CoD. They are in no position to sympathize.

Do you mean modern shooter as in the time the game takes place or as in today's modern day FPS game?

If the former, then I guess Battlefield 2... but I'm probably wrong.

If the latter, then Halo: CE is what most modern shooter's today are based off of.

The game should cost about 20 or maybe even 15 now. Apparently, they don't care about the people playing their games, but only about their wallets. If they really did care about the people, they'd lower the prices big time so EVERYONE should be able to buy a copy of the game.

Zombies is fun for the first 5 or so times you play it, then it's just torture, really. It does lag like hell on 360, and that's one of the big issues that they've been fixing. They fixed much of it, including some major drop-out glitches, but I still see and experience "yellow" and "red" lag quite a bit more than other 360 games.

So for $30 are you going to get Cod 4 or for $20 BF BC2? I highly doubt many people are buying the older versions for such exuberant prices. I'm sure some still are, but they'd be making a lot more money at reasonable prices. Just because people are still buying it, doesn't mean there would be more money made at a lower price. Just look at the Steam sales the past few days, people are eating up these games like crazy, a fair number of them are 6 months - 10 years old, some of them priced well below retail. It works.

It just amazes me that people are willing to pay $60 every year for the same rehashed shit. Don't get me wrong, Cod 4 was great, but getting more or less the same thing 4 times over is absurd.

However, props to them for having so many sheep. I personally think their business tactics encourage piracy and they could learn a thing or two from DICE/EA (lol learning from EA).

Lol, thanks? And it's fun if you're playing with people that know what they are doing. Instead of just hiding in one spot of the map, and just trying to hold a spot, we run around the entire map just fending for ourselves. It's much more fun.

And, tbh, I haven't had any type of lag related issue since the game first came out, and I play on xbox360. The only thing that I have had troubles with are the servers randomly dropping (but it seems that's been fixed for the most part.) Hardly ever lag unless we get a shitty host or some host from UK or something.

And the best CoD ever was either CoD2 or CoD4 as far as multiplayer. More then likely CoD4, as those two were the most balanced of any cods.

I have been playing MW2 on 360 for a lil while now, I love it. Thinking about getting the map packs for it, but the copy I have been playing is not mine, GF's cousin keeps leaving it over.

I borrowed Black Ops from a friend at work, played it for about 2 days... It was ok, but it didn't compare to MW2 IMO. I personally like the newer weapons and attachments (e.g heartbeat sensor, thermal scope). Also I like the perks better on MW2, Lord of war doesn't work for under barrels and pro doesn't give 2 secondary attachments. And shotguns as primary weapons? Fuck that, I can get more range with a pistol.

The few things with Black Ops that did seem better were, tomahawk > throwing knife, the camera spike sounded cool (didn't use it since I had 2 players on all the time), and the 2 grenade slots plus a 3rd for the new equipment was nice. Ballistic knife and crossbow sounded cool for just killing people with a lil more style, but not worth taking the secondary slot.

Still got quick scoping faggots that don't know how to properly use a sniper rifle... Someone actually hugged a wall on me in Black Ops, I thought I had joined a Ren server...

Although I do agree that MW2 should be considerably cheaper by now. The guy I borrowed Black

Ops from said he would have got MW2, but it was $10 more...

Balanced in terms of skillset. In CoD4, whoever was the better player won the fights/games everytime. In MW2, it wasn't like that. That's why MW2, in terms of competitive gameplay (because I did love the campaign), sucked compared to CoD4. The reason why CoD2 is up there is because it had no perks. Therefore, all it was about was basically who had the better gunning skill.

Yea, @Chew; you can tell that you were more of a pub-player lol. In the competitive seen in MW2, all you needed was Lightweight/Stopping Power, Marathon/SoH, Ninja. That was it. And either the UMP or the ACR. You couldn't even use Bling in competitive play, and using a Heartbeat sensor was pretty much useless seeing as how anyone that knew what they were doing used ninja anyway. Sadly, I have played people, in Variant, that have used Heartbeat sensors..

I am always a public player, I never try to be anything more. I love video games, but never get all hardcore into them. I just like to have fun.

My heartbeat sensor serves me well in public games, I hardly ever come across someone that didn't show on it before hand... unless they come from behind.

My perks are normally bling / stopping power / commando.

I use scavenger / danger close on my M16 with noob tube, and RPG class (for wasteland mainly).

Commando is typically always my third perk. I rarely ever see anyone else use heartbeat sensors, prolly because like you guys they underestimate the value of them. Plus I like my no falling damage and knifing people from 5 feet away... lols.

You probably pub-star'd MW2 and sucked at CoD4? Probably why you think Black-ops sucks.

i think black ops sucks and i have a 2.55 KD .. second chance pro and flak jacket are the dumbest things ever made plus the guns do damage based on how far away you are from someone ... worst call of duty game ever from a competitive stand point

OMG LOKI! Did you find a way to cheat in Black-ops yet?

And highly un-likely you'd beat my team. Well, maybe now seeing as I haven't played in nearly 2 weeks.

Didn't say that I wouldn't play you. And my team has been playing since the beginning of MW2 as well. So, we shall see whenever we get a game going. I'm going back tonight, so I'll start playing and getting my team together and we'll get a game soon.

I played Black Ops a couple of times this last week since I've had ab it of downtime. Unfortunately everyone that I play against exposes my lack of skills each round....I end the rounds with 3-5 kills and 15-20 deaths. I don't see how people kill me so fast when I'm shooting at them too!

Aim, then fire.
Dont run when you're near enemies.
Use your radar.
Learn the maps.

These basics are vital to getting a good KD

Yo sorry man. I had my notifications turned off, and whenever I got off Black-ops and checked my messages, I noticed them. Hit me up tomorrow and I'll play.

Uh, my highest on MW2 was 42, I think. CoD4 I can't remember, been too long. Black-ops (since using your killstreak rewards doesn't count towards your actual killstreak) I think it's 30.

Cod4 23 ks twice (once with shotgun)
MW2 47 ks (died getting scavenger pack)
BO ~20 without ks ~30 with nice pyro you must be good

oh wait only campers worry about any kind of killstreak that's past 11 ... infact i usually just end my life in pubs so i can restart unlocking my killstreak rewards

Who said I camped to get those? I don't camp, it's boring; I'd rather play renegade. I never camped on CoD4 and always won as MVP. But then those were pub matches...

CoD4: 29
MW2:51
Black Ops:23 cause killstreaks dont count towards it

My roommate got a xbox 360 and black ops. The game is pretty sweet specially on a 55 inch tv.

Actually, monitors are probably the best. 20-22 probably the best size, though I play on a 32.
