Hmm I'm not sure (yet) whether that's a or a D:

The last C&C's where pretty bad imo (as C&C that is. As RTS they still do their job)

I liked C&C3 and RA3 very much. C&C4 was downright awful. I didn't like Generals too much either, but that isn't a big deal because it was within it's own waters and was a respectable try at a new universe.

I just hope that the future of C&C isn't social networking. Multiplayer is crap compared to even a halfway decent story line and single player.

That was just a misquote from a news update EA gave a while back. C&C was never given to them. That studio was mentioned in the same sentence but not in the same context as C&C.

for the record Generals has nothing to do with tiberium or soviets but it plays well and is an entirely fun game

C&C 3 = mediocre

Red Alert 3 = the RTS equivalent of M. Night Shyamalan's The Village

C&C 4 = didn't have to play it to tell you how great it wouldn't be

It was a fun game, but it wasn't really a C&C game in some ways. Some of the gameplay was similar, but it still played fairly different. I guess it's nitpicking, but I will admit, it was fun.

C&C3, though, is absolute rubbish. They need to go back to a Tiberian Sun-like direction: Huge focus on atmosphere, smaller scale tactical warfare (none of this huge spamming bullshit, but not some tacked on "micro management" that no one actually uses because they can still win by just mindlessly spamming, etc), and so on. Also, they'd better give it at LEAST two years development time. There was what, 6 months between Kane's Wrath and RA3?

I actually liked CNC3 and Kanes Wrath. They were the last decent CNC games to be released.

Red alert 3 I tried but it was epicly shit and CNC4 I didnt even try because you could just tell it was of the same breed as Red alert 3.

IF they really want to try and get back to the best it would need to be more like RA2/YR for me.

If this is your idea for "the best" in war strategy games, you must be eleven fucking years old. RA2 is the same horse shit that they gave us with RA3. At least RA3 was honest about what it was and didn't even pretend it was taking itself seriously.

I kind of agree, but RA2's gameplay was undeniably fun. I think that's more of what he meant, and I agree.

It should still have the "gritty" feeling of C&C95 and RA1, though. I'd love to see a return to that, while still keeping in some cool scifi technology (and not turning it into MODERN DERPWAR: BROWN AND BLOOM AND GRAY)

I just got around to reinstalling C&C3 after some years of not playing it. I have to say it is definitely not as bad as I remember it being.

It has a good campaign. The story isn't that great, but the missions are pretty solid. It reminded me why I have it as one of my top 3 favorite C&C games up there with both RA3 and TS.

I just wish they had more game customization options... like disabling super weapons. In online matches I like superweapons because they give you an out... but when I play against skirmish AI, the superweapons make the game boring and dull after a while. I want one game where it's just a tank and unit war... but I can't do that because I'm too busy spending all my attention taking out the enemy super weapon every 2 seconds.

yes, let's make fun of someone for "liking" (when the fuck did Dover state he liked D&D, anyways?) something, right after we defend ourselves using the logic of "I find it fun, so it's fun".

Really, now- fun is subjective. That's the bottom line.

That being said, C&C3 was significantly worse than Red Alert 2 in every way. C&C4 I haven't even played, but it looks like the same bullshit, only with even less C&C-like gameplay.

it plays like every other c&c game plays and is quite fun; it's instead applying the c&c idea to modern times, like how call of duty made modern warfare

There are a couple people on the official C&C message boards that like C&C4. I don't see how... but they do... and they are actively defending the game's integrity.

oh yeah, no, i'll be the first to admit it's very hard to please everyone but you know, they could try to NOT make something that was as absolutely horrible as C&C4 or as extremely over-the-top as RA3 (or even RA2...), and actually give it around 2 years

Especially in the Tiberium universe games; C&C95 and TS just had this feeling that EA has UTTERLY failed to recreate. And they'd need someone who's played- and loved- those games extensively to really say they have someone who knows what the old C&C games were like.

Considering RA3 and C&C4 were circle jerking over their own 'nostalgia,' having someone who was involved in a game outside of the two traditional universes is not necessarily a bad thing.

My concern is directed more towards familiarity with storylines, the history of the brand, and just that magical feeling that comes from playing C&C. I agree that most of the basic C&C elements were present. I did buy Generals and play it for some time, but if you check my PC today you won't find it installed anymore along RA1, Tiberian Sun, RA2, and Renegade.

I read in another interview that he actually played a C&C game when he was 10 years old. He is 23 now; so obviously Generals wasn't his first game; I just hope he played the classic games well enough.

BTW EVERYONE, I couldn't resist and bought C&C4 yesterday! I don't want to bash something without trying it; especially since it's a C&C game. I remain optimistic!

Due to time constraints I only was able to play the first 10 mins of the first GDI mission. Good news is the 10 mins didn't feel like a letdown. In RA3, I was letdown in 3 mins. Haven't had time to do much ingame though so my opinions may change after a week or so of playing. The Crawler concept is kinda good; keeps you going all over and your force lean. The direct first person cutscenes aren't that bad. Meh, I will post some more opinions next week on how it goes; I am trying to be as unbiased as possible.

damn forgot, my internet connection dropped once and so the game quit on me. I think that is bullxxx. I hope in a year or so, they will disable this internet connection requirement.

Also reading the manual that came with it, there is way too much religious overtones for Nod. Seriously, lol...for example, the Black Hand infantry unit can wield a flamethrower and also throw...ready?...Holy Water bombs!

he's 23

how the fuck is a 23 year old in charge, i feel retarded and unaccomplished

Starbuzz wrote on Sun, 06 March 2011 19:53 Seriously, lol...for example, the Black Hand infantry unit can wield a flamethrower and also throw...ready?...Holy Water bombs!

who invited that guy to the squirt gun fight wtf

I thought the same too! I think he is good for the job. He has made a few candid posts in the C&C forums about C&C4 and the low public opinion of it; I was surprised to hear that from him because one would tend to think that someone in that position would be more guarded about saying such things.

I just think its good to have someone our age rather than some much old guy. Hopefully, he's played the classic games well enough.

edit:

btw, he has said that the next C&C won't be just a game...but a series of games. So EA seems to be working on some background to establish a platform where they can churn out a couple titles. And given how much admission of "mistakes" he writes of, maybe this time it may turn out to be good.

Let's stop kidding ourselves, Starbuzz. There hasn't been a good C&C game since RA1. The closest they came was Zero hour, which actually really really good gameplay-wise but people love to hate it since it doesn't have robots, cults, and little green crystals. Whatever new titles won't be able to recapture that old magic that the classic games had.

Personally, I'm waiting for someone to do something Nox-like. That'd really be the only good way to honor Westwood's memory. RA4 (Now with even more battle-bears!) or whatever C&C is coming next is just going to piss on their grave some more.

Right off.

I just wish they would throw up something quick and no matter what it is, it will be a better product than that C&C4 piece of crap.

S'alright. Toxin GLA pisses me off though. They have absolutely no drawbacks. It's like a more retarded version of nuke china.

i was kidding, stealth gla is the most annoying shit in the world

there's a mod called Shockwave that adds a new general for each side that EA didn't have time to include, they're sick

People get this wrong all the time (Especially in the StarCraft community lately!). It's not "overpowered", it's "awesome". The infantry general was the most awesome.

If there's a problem in the balance, it's not because something is too awesome, it's because the other things are not awesome enough. Balance should never take the form of taking away awesomeness.
