I especially love when they throw in random vehicles, even though they imbalance the map 90% of the time.

I need to stop being lazy and put out a decent fanmap sometime. Then again I've actually been busy as of late, but still.

Usually fanmaps are much bigger than that, making you run for 10 minutes without meeting an enemy.

Or the Harvester tends not to work.

And one of the trickiest is usually the placement of the AGT vs OB.
Though alot of them are very fun to play on.

I recall one desert map where it took about a dozen minutes to run from one base to another. Nothing was more fun than running in a straight line looking at the same recycled textures over and over again.

Whoever conceived that map should have been dropped in the Mojave Desert and left for the vultures.

That would be too kind; there are more texture variations in the Mojave desert

Any map larger than City is boring with current playercounts. Perhaps that with 64 players larger maps would be acceptable, but now certainly not.
You should be able to walk to the other side.

I thought this fanmap looked pretty good though, better than most westwood maps. Shame he never finished it.
