I think English is a beautiful language that has many different ways of expressing your thoughts, ideas, and emotions. However, people like dogtree refuse to utilize the resources available for improving the way they speak the language, instead; they hide behind the excuse "in MY language" as a shield for any mistakes they make.

You are not writing your language on this forum. This is an English community. If writing English is too difficult for you, perhaps I can direct you to this website so you will have a much easier time writing and speaking the language.

/Water, fire, air and dirt. Fucking English, how does it work?

The more complicated a language the easier it is to express yourself. Yes you can express yourself with limited and less vocabulary but it is much easier if you have a much stronger and vast vocabulary and know several languages. So really no it isn't 100% necessary it just makes it easier to get your thought across.

in holland we also have to know when we write words with d or t .

ik word morgen wakker.
jij wordt morgen wakker.

Its terrible. My spelling sucks in any language tbh.

I'm just curious: how exactly do you talk about things that have already happened without confusing them with things that are happening or will happen?

Like, if you wanted to say to someone "A bomb went off" how would you express the difference that it already happened and isn't happening as you speak?

Tbh English should be the only language spoken, all other langauges are just confusing and often make no sense.

I speak a few languages and while, yes, English is my native language its the language I only use as it just makes sense. Whenever i speak/type german/french/welsh(dont get me started with that shit) it sounds stupid and misleading.

It's easy because that's what you were brought up hearing and saying. If you were raised in a different country you would be having a hard time learning English.

I don't think that there should be a generally spoken language but I do take American English over British English... since it is much more clear and concise and doesn't have a stupid accent that tends to mumble words together to a point where untrained ears would not be able to understand what is being said.
