Scary thing disabling the AV. Is it really necessary? Then after that it's a self installing script right?
Thanks.

Still needs to be stickied :/

About the AV, I didn't have to disable mine, though I heard something about Norton giving false positives.
I thought that that had been solved already though. As I recall the file was send to Norton and they send a message back that it was a false positive.
What is your AV?

His antivirus is Norton.

You'll have to add the setup file to Norton's allowed files list.

/Remove Norton

/Get Microsoft Security Essentials

/Live happily ever after
