Germany is still reeling from its last two losses in World Wars - they're happy to win anything i guess

Quote:Jamaica, the small island country of 2.7 million people, has won nine medals in London, giving it the highest per-capita medal rate of any nation with multiple medals. Athletes won one medal for every 300,000 citizens. India (four medals) finished in last place. Its athletes would have needed to win 4,138 medals to have the same rate.

The United States is 40th on the per-capita medal count. Athletes have won 90 medals for 313 million people; a ratio of one medal per 3.5 million residents.

yeah because the watch is actually used during the race and not just some corporate sponsorship he's forced to wear .. and it's not like you need to pay attention to the road every single split second or anything going 200+ mph on narrow ass tracks lmao .. seriously dude

You could tape your cellphone to the windshield assuming that it displays the time when idle. Regardless, can't image you're having much fun if your checking the time while you race.

it's the condescending tone in which you post which makes it seem as though you think you're better than everyone. like that last line .. you couldn't just leave it at what your first two points were, you had to add that line that I'm upset.. lmao

nothing to do with alonso

Ferrari didn't even appeal, there just asked for conformation of if Vettel broke a rule.

FIA said he didn't brake any rules anyway
