use 2 people to jump above and preced to climb up the side of a biulding where u are not supposed to go. should this legal?????im kinda half and half on this:Yes, because it is a rare pay off of teamwork, and in most places beacons can still be disarmed from the ground.No, becuase obvisouily bounding boxes were placed around the bottom of sloped biuldings for a reason.(in the end i look at it like this; base to base mrls on certain maps are not supposed to be able to hit anything "going through the mountains on field", so people say dont do it. yet you are not supposed to be able to cross bounding boxes, but poeople dont saying anything about it)So do you think you shoud be allowed to do this in a game(laddered/clan)????

If you have the skill and team work to do it without being seen then you deserve to kill there buildings, and they deserve to lose one. Its funny there have been a few posts about this, and me and some other people i know have been doing this for months.

i am about half and half on it as well.to get on top of a building or to wall jump (mostly used on feild) teamwork is required. The whole point to a clan game is to use teamwork. however, if westwood intended for people to get on top of building and over walls, i'm sure they would have made a box or something that you could have climbed on.it should be allowed in clan games/laddered games. but b2b (base to base) is just being a n00b and wanting free points legal, it takes so long to do it and you take out a wussy ref, by the time you take out the ref, chances are opfor have taken out your ppand the chances of 2 stealth guy sneak into base and one of you have to carry nuke, not getting seen, the price is 400+400+1000 you might as well get 3 sbh and c4 the ref for 400+400+400and if things don't go rigth you're farked as the 2 sbh, if you're 3 you can always breakup and kill tanks, kill havocs, steal tanks, whatever, one last thing, nod almost always lose on island so don't play when you're on nod you have no chance angist cheating gdi'sfcdrazen
