This game is all about Command and Conquer: Red Alert suited in an FPS environment running on the Renegade W3D Engine.

We will work out all units, buildings and assets as much as we can to make it enjoyable and fun for everyone.

Play with the technician as your spawn character in the buildings of the Red Alert universe where you can purchase more advanced units after your first Ore Truck deposit.

On our server suitable for 50 players work as a team and organize rushes, through tactics and lead your team to victory with a broad range of units such as the Allied Light Tank, Allied Medium Tank, Soviet V2, Soviet Heavy Tank and the Soviet Mammoth Tank.

Also available are the Demolition Trucks and the Superweapon Atomic Bombs for those big explosions getting rid of any enemy unit or structure in a blast.

The game will have dynamics such as 'tied to structure purchase options' meaning you lose purchase items as buildings are destroyed, and of course the always fun 'manual ore harvesting' we all love to do.

Choose your character, drive, fly or glide your vehicle/aircraft/boat and conquer your enemy Red Alert style

Thanks for reading!

Months from now probably.

But it will be done

Seriously, why the W3D engine? Don't you think it's past its sell by date now? Sure, APB, AR and TSR are on it for historical reasons but starting a NEW project on the W3D engine is just plain silly... I know the TT team are going a great job of advancing it but it could take a long time before it becomes competitive with other engines available today.

There are plenty of open source FPS engines available, not to mention the myriad closed source ones...

Unity for example would be a great choice, especially with the cross platform support using OpenGL.

We really like the W3D engine, graphics is not really important either, gameplay is what counts. Some good visuals here and there is nice though.

I personally do this because i really liked APB back in the Beta days, after that it went downhill IMHO and it doesn't look like it will get any better soon. And i like modding W3D in general.

It's a nice little project to work on i think and a few others feel the same, guys/girls that really know their way around in the W3D area.

Yea it will take a long time and we only just started, the road is long but we're gonna try make something fun

What I want to understand is where Zunnie gets the time to work on these failures of ideas. Does he have a job? It doesn't seem like it. If the Dutch have a social safety net, I don't think it was designed for people to sit at home and make shitty Renegade mods

Maybe he's got a mental disorder. That would explain a lot of his posts, and why he's able to sit here and post spam all day.

I look forwards to seeing how things progress, as always it's going to be difficult to be able to get players for it, but if you can some how just make it so that you can download it through the tt downloader and play it every weekend on your usual server or whatever it could work.. Just an idea to help promote it.

Good luck.

ACK doesn't want to spend any more of his time on this game - you're acting like he's in the wrong for making that decision at the same time, he's pointing out that zunnie starts multiple projects and doesn't actually finish any of them (as did Titan, who was ignored) people on the MPF forums actually raised that same point, but zunnie deleted all the posts (surprised me a little, actually) it seemed like legitimate criticism to me, but it was struck down and removed purely because the owner did not like or agree with it that's not something they do over at Jelly

Ya no kidding. Everything I pointed out was deleted in the topic. There was a seperate topic that was pointing out balancing units in maps by one of their own members and that topic got locked because according to zunnie, we were "too aggressive". So when an opinion gets too hard to debate, it apparently is "too aggressive". Right...

I never thought I see the day where MPF would be the community where your opinions get shunned and hid away from the rest as if they never happened. And if it's a topic that falls in the "negative" category, it gets immediately locked or in many cases deleted or hidden from the general public. The Nuke topic, the topic on Tessa, the topic about balancing, the list goes on and on.

Erm... so you're just copying the APB interiors verbatim? Not going to add your own unique touches like an underground area, different interior layout, gantries and catwalks etc? No offence but if you're claiming to be starting over with an RA mod I'd have assumed you would actually do your own designs...

You don't even know what I was telling him. I gave him accurate critique. The model sucks. It's made of children's blocks and barely resembles the source material he's working from. For fuck's sake, the ramps to the foreman area in the back are taken straight from a building block set. You'd expect them to look somewhat more industrial. Please tell us what factory has giant ramps in the back of it instead of ladders, stairs, elevators, etc. There's no realism to this whatsoever.

This isn't even touching the obvious modeling problems: there's z-fighting where the polygons meet because they're not cut to match one another vert-for-vert. It's a mishmash of shitty viewport renders with an amalgamation of random colors. If the "artist" had taken a few moments to research how to properly show off a model, it wouldn't be 15 different colors with no shading. It wouldn't be a gigantic eyesore that looks like it was created by someone who just picked up Max.

I know you're just going to dismiss anything I say because you're an MPF shill, but you should listen to me. I create games and simulations for a living. I've been modeling for 13 years. If you can't handle criticism, maybe you shouldn't be posting garbage.

The only people who approve of this mod happen to be from MPF. What an amazing and completely unrelated coincidence!

well just coz i admin for MPF dont say anything ... i have my concerns with this mod witch i have made clear over at MPF but at the end of the day if a team wants to make it im not going to stop or hinder there efforts i will help out

i admit the image that was posted was not the best but it shows the lay out and basic structure of the building ... i show stuff that looks like shit knowing that its a WIP and is to be treated as such ... it dont matter what it looks like as long as it shows its function its a concept they dont have to be finished

ohhh and the team making this mod are just friends not paid to produce sexie renders that wont be in the game like the professionals do ... they just wanna make something they can play

if people wanna get all butt hert over it they can, its just funny how every one is getting all pissy about another "Red Alert Reneged mod" if its not as good as APB Woopadi doo, if its better all for them

i have not seen any criticism for any of my work on here or any were else for this mod ... the only thing of mine that has been posted is the games logo

you dont have to approve of the mod or MPF as we do not aprove of your intolerance for other people

I'm not being funny but I can't understand why you're not listening to ACK about this - this is what he does for a career, it's constructive criticism with tips regarding realism to improve your model. Yes, it is blunt but it's straight to the point.

I'm not one of those "Jelly" bunch of whom you keep referring, nor do I know ACK at all, but I don't think your mod is going to work, you're basing it on the original modification which has almost no player base.

Best of luck nevertheless.

Unity would be a terrible choice if you want to do anything with multiplayer and vehicles that can be entered/exited because of how the object ownership system works.

Oh really? I've not really looked into it in detail, what is it about unity that makes that sort of thing hard?

Either way, the point still stands that there are far better engine choices than W3D these days...

-TLS-DJ-EYE-K wrote on Sun, 22 September 2013 07:13Yup, thats what Renforums is for, maybe you should start those discussions over here since it is known for those kind of garbage. here you have a moderator from MPF saying that anything people say not 100% agreeing with zunnie or current MPF policy is "garbage" any legitimate criticism offered towards MPF is "garbage" the only people being ignorant in this topic (while consequently defending everything MPF does) are players with a personal interest invested in MPF - they're all MPF moderators, with powers granted to them by zunnie himself this is essentially the same thing that happened when Duke Gaming owner erikboxem was revealed to be a cheater, and a ton of Duke Gaming people came onto the forums to defend his name even 0x90 himself said erikboxem's story was impossible, because that wasn't how the cheat worked (he himself made the thing)

there was literally nothing to go on, because the evidence all pointed to the obvious (erikboxem posted a screenshot of himself running the cheat, which he didn't even deny using) at the end of the day, the Duke Gaming players retreated back to Duke Gaming and chose to ignore the truth - i expect the MPF players to say "forget it" and stop posting as well history repeats itself - as APB is dead, you can safely say any clone or attempt at re-creating another Red Alert Renegade-based FPS is not worth the time, but best of luck to you guys

The Tesla Coil as envisioned by our developer ImperialKaskins.
WIP Image and does not reflect the final state yet.

The Tesla coil saw widespread use in the second world war, going so far as to become one of the staples of the Soviet military installation. The standard coil stood about forty feet tall and was surmounted with a bulbous electric diode, typically one brimming with excess electricity. The base of the coil hid a small underground control bunker that contained a single operator, usually a Soviet technician, whose purpose was to direct the coils attacks at enemy targets. This would be done by ionizing the air between the coil's diode and the target, completing the circuit and creating a lightning bolt. This bolt was devastating against infantry, usually killing them instantly, and proved almost as effective on most vehicles.

my thinking is that this mod, in the best case scenario, isn't going to get tons and tons of players the maps and settings should probably accommodate a lower number

Renegade, the stock maps, and its settings and prices in general were intended for 16 vs 16 (vehicle limit of 8, being half of that) you might want to keep the map sizes similar, rather than scale everything up and have a battlefield with limited interaction also, DJ is still oblivious to the world around him

I agree with you regarding to limited size and everything, but not with 32 players. For me the sweetspot is 24 players, providing plenty of action all over the place without getting too messy. In any case, most mods seem to have been made of like 48 to 64 players in terms of size.

that too
fan maps are a neat idea, but they're doomed for two reasons

one, the majority of Ren players don't have the maps and the games generally have low player counts two, the majority of fan maps are pretty huge, so the small number of players and massive terrain make for some pretty empty and uneventful games (on top of that, most fan maps are largely unfinished and kind of trashy)

if you look at the stock Renegade maps, they aren't that big at all

Is this a total conversion whereas we would download it as a game installer, if so wouldn't it be wiser to use the auto download feature 4.0 users have (rather than installing another version of renegade, this is where it will fail to attract attention)

And I agree big maps are tedious (PvP/AOW Mode) unless you bump up the speed of everything.

Other than that I look forward to playing it, maybe it will become my next new addiction

And trust me, a lot of founders or high-level executives don't know what's going on in their organisation, so I wouldn't be at all surprised if that'd be the case for RA:FPS (and/or TCW), nor is it obvious.

I've never understood this intense secrecy surrounding mods. You guys aren't going to have more than 15 to 20 players at most when/if it releases. You're not ginning up any interest in this based on the fact that APB has already gone where you've just begun to go. It's not like you're going to magically draw players to play the same thing they already played from 2003 to 2013. You do realize that 11 years have passed since I started working on APB? Do you think those thousands of players who played during that decade are going to come back for this? Do you think there are enough players to bother modding this dead game?

Go learn Unreal and make something that people will care about, and for fuck's sake post your work on Polycount so you get some actual feedback to improve instead of just people going "HURRDURR IT ARE AEWSUM!!!!1"

I do it for sheer enjoyment, I don't plan to be a hardcore professional developer like you.. And I have worked with newer editors like UDK, Hammer and Cryengine..

I don't intent to bring back the thousands of players back, but I would like to create things and provide some fun to existing players we got..I could care less about players ingame... it's all about creating something I can play with members of MPF or whomever wishes to play..

P.s there is no secrecy.. why would I show off things that aren't even complete.. And what does it matter RAFPS is going off the same idea as APB.. who cares, no need to make it a big issue lol

Isn't it obvious what it will be?

Quote:

This game is all about Command and Conquer: Red Alert suited in an FPS environment. We will work out all units, buildings and assets as much as we can to make it enjoyable for everyone.

Play with the technician as your spawn character in the buildings of the Red Alert universe where you can purchase more advanced units after your first Ore Truck deposit.

On our server suitable for 75 players, hosted on an 8 core Xeon 3.6 GHz with 16GB RAM, work as a team and organize rushes, through tactics and lead your team to victory with a broad range of units such as the Allied Light Tank, Allied Medium Tank, Soviet V2, Soviet Heavy Tank and the Soviet Mammoth Tank.

Also available are the Demolition Trucks and the Superweapon Atomic Bombs for those big explosions getting rid of any enemy unit or structure in a blast.

The game will have dynamics such as 'tied to structure purchase options' meaning you lose purchase items as buildings are destroyed, and of course the always fun 'manual ore harvesting' we all love to do.

Choose your character, drive, fly or glide your vehicle/aircraft/boat and conquer your enemy Red Alert style

Random team types at the start of the map, with unique structures and units based on that team type being available would be a cool dynamic.

For example, one team might start as France and the other side as Cuba.

I know that really that's RA2, but it's still something that might interest you if you're not going to strictly stick to a direct translation.

Imagine playing the same map 10 times, but it's a different dynamic every time you played it, with different structures and units.

Will you introduce the Yak and MiG? Seeing the attack dog and kennel would be cool (even if they are just bots)!

I also miss the sand bag walls and chain link fences.

I was hoping that you could convince me a little more than that, but whatever floats your boat I guess.

I'm not sure how different you can really make it to be honest, seeing as both games have C&C mode as their primary game-type.

I guess you could tweak the balance a bit and implement certain units differently, but at the end of the day there's no denying that the two projects are really quite similar.

how did Reborn do (or how is it doing)?

that was in the works essentially forever, and in two or less weeks it came to a grinding halt this might not be the best use of time, especially considering someone else already modded Renegade into Red Alert (and did it 10 years ago)

RA:FPS is simply a clone because it's on the same engine and the idea is not original.

well even though i shouldnt be responding here, i always see the same things happen on this forum someone tries, nearly everyone tries to shoot it down.

however renegade is near dead, and noone around here has even considered to even take whole renegade to a new engine, upgrade scripts and make it equally modable as renegade is now.

I believe that most of these oh so good guys could create a "new" renegade, which tbh really doesnt have to be based on any rts game if you guys have some imagination.

it would make renegade newer and removes the EA limits, on top it would make it possible to get it on steam if were lucky as an extra all the fun things people can do will still be possible in which i think mods, mapping etc, the main reason i stil code for renegade is because i dont know a game in which i would find it fun to create something because most game are way to limited in their gameplay

If you are suggesting building a modern engine, which is backwards-compatible with Renegade's assets and scripts, I would recommend trying that out for yourself first (no offence meant) and reflecting on the process about a month in. Impossible - no; but very very long (and possibly very frustrating) - yes. It doesn't matter how "good" someone is. Fact is that the good people have a job in that area, which pays their bills. Doing something like the above will do nothing, but broaden their portfolio, which is nice if you are stuck with a shitty job (or jobless, to which I'll come back in a minute) and out of education, but doesn't do much otherwise (this applies especially to designers and artists, IMO).

Quote:

I find the argument that UDK is limited in the different types of gameplay mechanics that you can implement to be very naive. The same goes for Unity. My educated guess is that CryEngine isn't far behind either.

A common argument among people is that there aren't enough resources out there for people to learn from, which isn't true.

Another argument is that it's too hard or complicated, because of all the features. A modernized re-make of the Renegade engine would be complicated as well. Graphics pipelines aren't what they used to be as we've moved away from the fixed pipeline (which vanilla W3D is) and are focusing on a programmable pipeline (shaders, which Saberhawk nicely chiselled into the engine). We have post-processing, different lighting models (to name a couple) and I don't even want to start on the physics. With so much "freedom" there is no way it won't get complicated.

If learning a new programming language (UnrealScript) is too much, scripts.dll coders should be familiar with C++, which would make their transition into C# smooth (for Unity).

Now, not having a job isn't actually such a bad thing, if you want to do game development (in one form or another) and find it fun. It's a great opportunity to do something cool and pave your way into a career. With that being said, I fail to see how using an outdated, limited, practically ancient game engine to redo something that's already been done ages ago (using the same engine) is doing anyone any good. The argument here is that the gameplay is going to be different, but how different can it be, provided that the Renegade "package" is mostly good for making Renegade-like games (aka "way to limited in their gameplay")? Is it worth the effort?

I skimmed over a few comments about CS' success. I would remind you that CS was a mod for a state-of-the-art blockbuster game (of it's time), which already had established a strong, vibrant online community before the mod was released. Another argument is that CS is extremely easy to pick up and play. "Pick up gun and shoot" is a pretty detailed description of the gameplay, IMO. Not to forget that the setting of the game is such, that your average Joe could relate to (the buzzword is "immersion" here).

Since I realize, that I might sound a bit aggressive, the point of this post isn't to bring you down. Not at all! I think that what you are doing is in it's essence cool, but kind of pointless. Why not do something fresh and modern instead?

Red Alert has never been my cup of tea, but it's ok. Why not have a dark, gritty (heck I can imagine it with gore, even) take on it in UDK, instead of doing something that mostly it's developers will play?

Now, not having a job isn't actually such a bad thing, if you want to do game development (in one form or another) and find it fun. It's a great opportunity to do something cool and pave your way into a career. With that being said, I fail to see how using an outdated, limited, practically ancient game engine to redo something that's already been done ages ago (using the same engine) is doing anyone any good. The argument here is that the gameplay is going to be different, but how different can it be, provided that the Renegade "package" is mostly good for making Renegade-like games (aka "way to limited in their gameplay")? Is it worth the effort?

I skimmed over a few comments about CS' success. I would remind you that CS was a mod for a state-of-the-art blockbuster game (of it's time), which already had established a strong, vibrant online community before the mod was released. Another argument is that CS is extremely easy to pick up and play. "Pick up gun and shoot" is a pretty detailed description of the gameplay, IMO. Not to forget that the setting of the game is such, that your average Joe could relate to (the buzzword is "immersion" here).

Since I realize, that I might sound a bit aggressive, the point of this post isn't to bring you down. Not at all! I think that what you are doing is in it's essence cool, but kind of pointless. Why not do something fresh and modern instead?

Red Alert has never been my cup of tea, but it's ok. Why not have a dark, gritty (heck I can imagine it with gore, even) take on it in UDK, instead of doing something that mostly it's developers will play?

You're so right. You have some really good, well explained points that really hit home. You also have some good ideas, too. Nice post!

The only thing is, Zunnie and company are doing this because they find exactly what they are doing fun and enjoyable. They're not doing it for the reasons you mention, and have little aspiration to do so. I'd wager that they're mainly doing this for themselves, and would like some players to join them, but the real goal is to make it, rather than have it received favourably by a large audience, learn marketable skills or improve portfolio's and CV's.

I'm guessing you've never heard of Renegade-X...

I for one am eager for MP release, and plan on modding that when the time comes ive heard of it, and i keep an eye out for it, however i am totally not skilled enough to be able to create my own ssgm like functionality, mainly because i find it hard to learn decompiling and most game are protected against it.

ive even tried to do it with renegade just to learn the proces however i just cant find the tools/tutorials for it so i kinda gave up on the thing its easy to talk when you already now that kind of stuff it quite hard to learn it.especially on your own

In reverse order to your post, I'll skip the "its easy to talk" bit for now, but I'll get back to it later.

The topic of "decompilation"-based (or "exe hacking") mods is a really broad and controversial one, so I'll spare any details that come to mind. There are no(t a lot of) "general" tutorials on how to do this, because you already need to be a ^good^ (actually, very experienced and brilliant fit the description better, IMO) programmer to understand what's going on under the hood. Every engine is different and the more experience you've got with implementing different games from scratch in different contexts, the more sense things will make when looking at the code structure, coming out of a disassembler. Games in general are "protected against it", because by injecting their own code, people can write exploits, allowing for cheats and/or even worse (identity theft comes to mind), which adds "understanding compilers" and "understanding obfuscation techniques" to the skills list if you want to venture into something like that.

I, personally, perceive things like recompiling scripts.dll (jonwill), some of the major improvements to the Renegade engine (Sir Kane, Saberhawk, jonwill) and other simmilar projects like a sort of really impressive, amazing voodoo, done by some of the best witchdoctors around.

So with that said, why bother to do that kind of stuff in the first place, when there are enough modern, well-documented, general-purpose, feature-rich engines out there (that don't require you to get your hands dirty with writing in assembly...or feeding Russian hacking forum topics into Google Translate)?

From what I understand, once the multi-player version (of Renegade-X) is out, they will ship a development kit for map-makers and coders. With 90% certainty, I think that the language will be UnrealScript - Renegade-X, after all, is made in UDK. My bet is that they will ship UDK with the Renegade X assets and code. All the more reasons for people to start picking UDK up (if the previous weren't enough).

I can see the "walk a mile in someone else's shoes" argument, but some of the people, who post here have actually been in that position before.

Pardon me for the autobiography,

Toggle Spoiler but I started modding Tiberian Sun in 2000, at the age of 12 ("coding"). I tried picking up my first C++ book when I was around 14. None of my relatives are in a technical/engineering profession (as a matter of fact, my mother dismissed my interest in making games and mods as a waste of time), my IT-inclined friends at the time were far more interested in how cool this piece of hardware is over the other, so they couldn't be bothered with the "programming nonsense", teachers in high-school couldn't be bothered with spending time with me about something that we might cover for an year in IT class when I turn 17. After Generals, I "retired" from modding to focus on my studies. I didn't mingle with people, who code until I went to uni at the age of 18, so in that span of 6 years I was completely on my own - books, tutorials, write code, repeat, experiment. When I started my first degree (in Informatics), I was ahead of most of my classmates, when it came to Programming classes.

My reasons for quitting that degree and going abroad are completely irrelevant to the topic of learning the "kind of stuff", so I'll cut to the chase. It is hard doing it on your own, and based on what I've said above, I think that I completely understand you and a lot of the people who are just starting out (or are anxious about starting out). At the same time I can't help to think that people nowadays are exposed to so much more sources of information, compared to back in the days, so with that in mind, I think that "quite hard to learn it.especially on your own" is a bit exaggerated.

It's no walk in the park, but nowadays there are ways to learn things (that used to require going to specialized schools) without leaving your home. People can go beyond the basics and even into so many other areas without having to shove money into an institution and/or spend ages sourcing materials from books. There are so many forums, Google+ Hangouts, communities - It's crazy!

Thank you :-]

A few things escape me, then. If they are making it just for the sake of making it, why post about it? Why make an indieDB page about it? Why get into a "cs made it big <passive aggressive about how we can make it big>" argument? Why defend an engine choice? Why the whole MPF thing in the first place? It's like having a marketing machine for the sake of having a marketing machine?

I've read "MPF Production" topics before and the reason why I'm bothering with replying to this one is that about 80% of the game-dev job descriptions I've read in the past 3 years feature "passion for making games" and these guys seem to have it... which is really great (and kind of admirable - I know people on GamDev courses in uni, who don't), but are going about it a weird way, which is kind of disappointing... and pointless.

Your current idea will fail. You don't even realize what time and effort it takes to make such a modification. If your persist, go away from W3D. It's the best advice I can ever give you.

This! See, even all reasonably famous mod-makers advise you to move away from the W3D engine. Not because it is a bad engine (with the TT fixes) but because it is a dead-end. TT will work on it for a while longer, but don't expect huge gains.

If you want to spend your time wisely, seek cooperation with Renegade-X and APB to bring RA(2) to the UDK. That way you can even release it for free, completely legal.

I would like to see it evolve into modern gaming. It's a bloody shame EA doesn't create somekind of Unity3D version for people to play through their browser or something. Renegade's AOW feature is unique and the game itself can host a massive array of online modes compared to other games.

It might be true that what MPF are attempting to do has been done before in the past, but it's not necessarily true that it's going to be 100% the same. Some people play golf for fun, these guys want to make mods for themselves & their playerbases enjoyment. I still can't understand why there's so much hostility towards this, it doesn't make sense.

there's only so much they can make different about it - maybe hole 13 has sand traps in a different spot, or hole 5 has slightly longer grass on the fairway

if they're going to make something that's already been done, and can't say a single thing about what's different about their take on it, then it would almost be better if no one was making anything at all

Gah, the insults being thrown reminds me of pre-schoolers... seriously. From both parties.

The only things I have to say about all this is that MPF has some talent in their ranks. Not all of them are cut out for game making (Ignoring constructive criticism is a definite out), but I have seen their potential.

But their potential is wasted on an engine that is older than most other engines, and having bad work thrown in with quality work.

Seriously, heed the others' advice, and move to a different engine. Preferably one that is actually updated (Source, UDK, Unity, or even a custom engine). That way, the good work that could would have a larger audience. Seriously, imagine if RenegadeX decided to build on the Wolfenstien 3D engine instead of UDK.

Also, heeding constructive criticism is a good thing. At the very least, acknowledge that it exists without posting a stupid pointless and unfunny image macro.

And note this might be your last constructive post before this entire thread goes back to trolling. So I recommend heeding it.

Still riding my dick on that? Just because I was able to reproduce and code it from the bottom 10x better than his doesn't mean it's stolen. If that's the case, then please shoot the many of us that created SSGM plugins and released them because they're ideas from servers over the years. Might aswell shoot the guy who created !donate and !teamdonate too!

You dont have something serious to reply, so you try to troll PPL, sadly its not working that way and just shows how small-minded you actually are.

Says the guy who lacks any form of intelligence and can't comprehend any bit of grammar and who has this as a signature.

Ya... the irony.

And no worries, you dont have to follow my Moddin way since you were banned for obvious reasons actually every1 agreed with.

Your modding ways? Ya. It totally does well since it killed Area 54. LOL.

Also G-Camo - ImperialKaskins has talent. Sadly... his way of plotting it is complete garbage and has yet to change it.

It's not really a troll topic when 90% of the people in this thread are posting constructive criticism but to the naive and delusional people, it's "trolling" because their work is getting put down.

Speaking German doesn't really make you cool and it isn't really killing "the mood" as you say. All you're proving is that you can speak another language, but still fail to use correct punctuation with your own foreign language.

Nana, mach dir mal keine Sorgen um meine Rechtschreibung, im Gegensatz zu dir spreche ich mehr als nur eine Sprache fließend und insofern freut es mich das du dir die zeit genommen hast um meine Sätze zu übersetzen. Natürlich macht mich das nicht cool aber wie sooft hebt es mich von dem Kaffeesatz der Troll Poster hier genügend ab um nicht mit ihnen verglichen zu werden.

APB's not quite dead yet. Work is continuing to be done on the project and new groundworks are being laid to revive it somewhat. There are servers up, but with the state that the game is in and non-existent stat system, APB is truly at an all time low.

If you've got any constructive suggestions over what you think went wrong, I'd be happy to forward them.

lol, he was kinda late to the party on Exodus. He didn't get in with the n00bstories "crowd" (what was left of it) until after he got banned from Exodus. Honestly, I think that's why they liked him!

It was kinda funny, we banned him without good proof, we just knew he was full of it and we needed to get his ass OUT of there because he was ruining our fucking server - and he absolutely caused the biggest dramafest that community ever had. It wasn't a relevant community long enough to have much more interesting stuff, but that time was a good ol' fashioned textbook Renedrama fest. The onslaught of TmX members complaining on our forums about his ban resembled almost exactly the newly registered MPF people posting shit on this thread. But in his case, some of TmX's mods actually PMed me and wanted to discuss his cheating and abuse of his mod powers at TmX (among other things) while ReLoaDeD was gone temporarily. He wasn't everyone's friend.

As for Xpert having started a new community, lol - good hyperbole .
