Subject: Anyone remember that Renegade programmer?

A few years ago a programmer that worked on Renegade swung by these forums. He was asking for testers for his game, which was a team based FPS, but he was using basic geometry at the time as place holders for characters and structures.

People tried picking his brains about the "points fix" at the time, but he couldn't really remember. Does anyone remember the site he linked to? I'm curious how it turned out and if it was ever finished.

Yeah, I remember when he swung by, but I seem to recall he was chased off by the rabid hordes that hang around here. Can't recall the name of the game he was working on though...

Are you referring to this guy?

I remember him mainly from the fact that he appeared to be based in Singapore (as am I) and also from the Dalek like characters in his game.

Apparently the game is still around here: <http://www.army21.com/index.php>

Yeah, it was exciting at the time I guess, and people took the opportunity to squeeze what they could out of him.
