How: Developed by German politicians Marx and Engels in the book The Communist Manifesto, communists believe that society should be run by the workers. It has been attempted and failed in countries including Russia, China, and North Korea.

Where: At the distant bottom-left of the politcal spectrum

How: Based on communism, socialism is a much more authoritarian approach to a worker-led society. People are guaranteed jobs and given them, while being closely regulated. It has been attempted and failed in countries including the Soviet Union.

I am Anarcho-Capitalist
What: Anarcho-Capitalism
Where: At the distant top-right of the political spectrum
How: Anarcho-Capitalists believe that big business should take over government to the point of government not existing. While they believe there should be law, they also believe that the law should be owned by businesses. Anarcho-capitalism is a modern belief and has never been attempted.
