WASHINGTON, July 2 — The government and private technology experts warned Wednesday that hackers plan to attack thousands of Web sites Sunday in a loosely coordinated “contest” that could disrupt Internet traffic.

yeah.. i heard about that. the governnet people apparently shut down a website talking about that. i bet sites like peak webhosting, msn, cbs, cnet, and all the other big sites are gonna get hacked.

Havocmanmy mom said something like this whould happen.

Then your mum is smarter than the US gover..... leaving that.

This is really, REALLY, sounding like a fake threat. People said that Osma poisoned coke...

Did he? No.

Hacking Contest? Now that is innovation! Put to the wrong uses of course but still, I probably couldn't have thought of that.

We can hope it is hollow, but the the one hit kill bullets in Red Alert 1 were hollow points.

That doesn't mean that there are others who enjoy this type of thing and will do it anyway just to scare us to heck.

yes, but there wasn't a website telling several thousand osamas to poison the coke over the internet, now was there...?

Yes, I even caught a virus yesterday...Via a single stupid HTML files.Now oldbies, don't tell me that you can't catch anything while browsing a website.
Anyways, virus was under complete control.

Do virus severly slow down your computer? Ive noticed it alot. My computer used to be super speedy and I still do all the matenince checks to it and everything and delete old files I dont need/use! But for some odd reason it runs a bit slower then before. Not to mention my FPS for Renegade used to be around 60 on avg. and now its usually only 15 sometimes 30! My ping used to be around 89 on avg and now its always into the 250(prolly has to do with my connection instead of a virus) But anywho--how could I check this. Norton antivirus doesn't seem to bring anything up! Blah--damn technology!

Thats quite funny.

I cant wait until some idiot goes and tryies to attack the Pentagon site. I remember back when a group of people just camped out their site, refresing every 2 seconds are so .. The Pentagon attacked them all. It was quite funny I thought.
But people who randomly cause damage for no reason other than to get their kicks in deserve some jail time in a cell with Bubba

You can't get a virus from a HTML page alone. HTML code is not able to install files unless you confirm that you want it installed or the program is already on your computer. Most "SpyWare" and unwanted applications come from boxes that look like the one below. You should ALWAYS click no on the box unless a) you know what your doing or b) you are expecting the box to appear and know what it's installing.

While I have both a firewall and an antivirus program, my firewall isn't really necessary for my poor old 56k modem

My post wan't aimed at you by the way. But it is suprising how many people click "yes" just to get rid of the box without reading it. Mozilla is a good browser for avoiding popups because it has a disable popup feature. Now if only IE cought onto that feature.

I don't have a firewall or anything on my computer, I don't have anti-virus software either, and my computer is fine.
