Yes, could you take a look at it, and give me some feed back on what you think. And also I accidently attached it all together, and saved it as the one that was supposed to be un attached, so is there a way to undo this?

Hmmm, SAM site right?

I think it looks alright, it does serve it's purpose. I think it would look alot better with the base/turret changed, give the base/turret part a different look and add some detail down there. Also, close the tubes and make it look like there are missiles in them (After you close the tubes up and delete the faces on the inside, extrude all of the faces on the fronts to make a cone, than pull it back inside of the tube a little so it looks like it's inside the tube.). You could also add some antennas or a radar dish or something to the base, or pipes going into the ground or something like that.

To answer your question...

Select all of the vertices of one of the objects that you want to be by itself (like all of the vertices of one of the missile tubes for example), right click->detach. Repeat this for each of the objects.

spreegemHow should I change the base of it?

That's up to you. You could make it look like the CnC SAM site's base, or RA2's SAM Site (The Patriot Missile thing), or whatever you want.

Lol, do you even read any of the replies to your threads at all? I already gave 2 ideas on what to make the base of your SAM site after, and told you that it does need alot more detail than just a plain cone.
