Wanted a place to post those cheater's names?

A place to show others what cheats we are coming up against?

Want to see who else to ban from our servers?

Look no further! www.EA-Cheaters.co.uk is a newly created forum- based website, allowing any Renegade or Generals players to inform fellow gamers of hairy hackers and childish cheaters.

CnCAndyXP invites you all to fill out a 10 second registration form, and have access to many of the cheaters we already have encountered. Friendly clans and other sites are able to share and show information.

Maybe if we all work together, we will finally bring an end to all these cheats.

Naming the cheaters is a start. So join today!

What wasn't mension was that if you are a mod or host of a 10 or more player server, you get to be in the 'server mod's' group of the forum. You will then be given special access to a part of the forum where you can post IP's of the cheaters. :twisted: :twisted: :twisted:

Darkeye one thing, why the hell you put forums in a frame, taht totally screws up the autofit tables...

Those menus could be intergrated in to the forum system as a all in one...

<http://www.renevo.com> is a good example of it in action.

Its kool of you to go get a domain and set up a site , I say put some PHP coding in to make it more easily viewed and you have a totally rocking site..

I like the idea and current stuff aswell though .

(PHP is sugested becuase site is based round a PHP encoded forum)

erm, yeah, and if you look on the site, you will see a link for renguards website .

But until Renguard is released, this is going to be the best solution.

Also, what if someone gets round renguard? What if a certain individual made and anti-renguard piece of software? Then we are just going top be where we are now.

So if we can ban as many IP's and usernames as possible, renegade could be a cheat free environment for big servers.

Uh, but the problem is that most of the server owners in the community are already on the server owner's forum here and we've got quite an extensive blacklist already under way... hence the :rolleyes:

The fact a lot of us don't have access to ur extensive blacklist is one of the reasons ea-cheaters appeared.
