It still needs alot more detail and some curvyness (especially on the grips).

I went to that site. It says that it has a silent underbarrels grenade launcher. If you look at the detached unit though, you see it has a clip and the shells inside look like about 356 ammo, not like grenades. They cant be explosive. If they are then the maker should be in the guiness book of world records for the smallest grenades ever. Sincec when do grenades come in clips like that??? That is definitely a small handgun. Perhaps it has a seperate attachment not shown that takes its place but that cannot be a grenade launcher.

They are bullets! A bullet is just a projectile fired from a firearm, it's size, use, speed, etc. has nothing to do with rather or not it's a bullet.

Hello, dumbass. Hypocritical retard. Damn, I mean, how dumb can you get?

Yes I did go to your link, that's a grenade launcher, and so is the one that Nodbugger made on his ak. You apparently didn't go to the link I posted, that grenade launcher IS LISTED AS A GRENADE LAUNCHER, you fucking moron. OMG, you've amazed me again, I didn't think you could get any dumber... You have no clue what you're talking about, there is no specified amount of explosives needed in a projectile to make it a grenade, you don't know how much of that bullet is the explosive projectile, and how much of it is the propellent. LOL, so grenades wouldn't come in magazines like that? Some one should go tell HK that, because they aren't as 'educated' as you... (the HK OICW's (<http://world.guns.ru/assault/as40-e.htm>) main feature is it's integrated Grenade launcher, which fires 20mm grenades, that are LOADED IN IT BY MAGAZINES. (btw, they're called 'magazines', not 'clips'.))

LOL... You come in here pretending like you're smart, but you don't even try to look anything up, or at least act like you know what you're talking about.

So you know what their guns are, but the damn company that makes them doesn't?

A grenade launcher is just a gun that shoots explosive projectiles. The guns size, shape, design doesn't matter. The way the gun loads each grenade doesn't matter. The size of the explosive projectile doesn't matter.

Wait, lets consult a dictionary...

- n.
1. A small bomb or explosive missile that is detonated by a fuse and thrown by hand or shot from a rifle or launcher.
 2. A glass container filled with a chemical such as tear gas that is dispersed when the container is thrown and broken.

K, um, first of all, clip is also a proper way of talking about, in fact a more proper way, when it is a small clip that holds 6-12 bullets which is all that does, magazine is for something like a machinegun or an AR15 would have. Second, I know that things other than the standard looking grenade are grenades, I also know a large amount about explosives. The amount of explosive material capable of being in a shell that size is not big enough to do any damage except on a direct hit. If you were to hit the floor a foot away from a person, it would not even scratch them being that size. I assume they dont have any explosive material because it would be inefficient and stupid to make it that way but perhaps the makers of the AK assault rifles are the biggest idiots in the history of the world. So mabey you are right.

So mabey you are right.

Ooo, completely wrong again.

The size and capacity has nothing to do with it. It's a magazine, not a clip. A magazine is either internal or external, and holds the ammunition that is being fed into the gun. The clip is INSIDE the magazine, and is what actually does the loading. The clip, in this case, is the spring/plate below the ammunition that pushes it up into the gun. In another example, the m1 garand has an internal magazine, the ammo is loaded into this magazine by inserting a clip with bullets attached to it into the magazine. A magazine is just a place or object where ammunition is stored inside, in this case, a small box that is inserted into a gun.

<http://www.angelfire.com/art/enchanter/clip.html>

If you were to hit the floor a foot away from a guy with an explosive projectile the size of a .357, it would seriously damage the leg, and would most likely result in the loss of the leg if not treated. The grenade fired by the OICW is a 20mm projectile, which is roughly .78cal, which is twice the size of the grenade in question, the 20mm grenade is capable of taking out an entire room.

Inefficient? How would it be inefficient to use a semi-automatic grenade launcher that uses magazines, which can be quickly loaded into the launcher, and holds around 10-15 grenades which probably have an effective blast radius of around 2-3 feet?

Give it up already... You know absolutely nothing about guns, ammunition, or explosives. You don't even try to do at least a little research to see if you're correct, you just 'assume' something is what it is or isn't because it doesn't look right to you.

Does anyone else think that you're just lying about you being in the military? If you were in the military for 7 years, how is it you don't know the difference between a clip and a magazine? Or what a grenade launcher is? Or what are considered grenades?

i would have to disagree about something. The amount of chemical doesnt HAVE to effect the amount of the exsplosion. A stick of dinomight has very little chemical in it, most of it is insulator, to slow the fuse, and i think we can all agree that dinomight has a effective blast radius compared to the amout of chemical it has in it.

It's more like, the term, not just the proper term.

'Clip' is mistakenly used alot as 'magazine'. The clip is the device inside the magazine that loads or inserts the ammunition into the gun, the magazine is what the ammunition is stored in.

(I'd bet this came from when the m1 garand was in use... The bullets that were loaded into the internal magazine, were loaded with a clip that held the cartridges together to make loading faster. I think most people just assume that that's the same thing as sticking a magazine into a modern gun.)
