Do u beilive that extra terestrials are real? I found a bunch of "proff" at <http://artbell.com> I'm skeptical. A bunch of "ubductys and phycics think we will contact with them at 2005. Well what do u think?

FFS "Ubductys"?

It's cool to believe in that stuff. Not to go so far as saying "THE ALIENS ARE COMING IN 2005, WE MUST ALL PREPAAAAAAAARE", just not discrediting it.

Do aliens exist? The universe is infinite, I think the chances are pretty high.

Are they skinny and gray with big black eyes, flying around in saucers above our planet? No.

Ferhagol think the surest sign of intelligent alien life is that none of it has tried to contact us

I realize that's a joke (Lol), but I hate when people say "Intelligent life doesn't exist because it hasn't contacted us".

"Intelligent" life does not mean "freaking genius" life. By what sort of logic at all does alien life have to be more advanced than us? Yes, we send out radio signals as an "attempt" to contact alien life. Pphhht. Last I heard, broadcasts from the 40s are only reaching Pluto right about now.

Humanity is sickeningly self-centered. "Because they haven't done anything for/to us" is never a good reason for anything.

Compared to past history, that statement is like:

Poland, 1930: "Germany doesn't have an army hostile towards us because they haven't attacked us with it."

or

Christopher Columbus, 1490: "There are no other continents because no one has sailed to Europe from them."

I defenetly think that we are not alone in the universe.

Think about it, think how big the universe is said to be. Look up at the sky and look at the stars at night. Somone of those stars are thousands of light years away. Somone whre up there there has to be life.

There are 2 planets that have life in this galaxy alone (earth, and neptune) and that is just our galaxy alone. (neptune has life in the water under the layers of ice. At least thats what i heard in school...)

IceSword7 ...(neptune has life in the water under the layers of ice. At least thats what i heard in school...)

First, Neptune is a gaint ball of gass, with a molten core. Second, one of Neptune's moons has ice on it. It is not known whether there is life there. It is certainly possible, but it is not true to say that from what is known about the moon. There has not been a probe to land on the moon, but only fly by satelites on their way out of the solar system.

There might be life in our own solar system, a meteor from Mars might have traces of ancient bacteria, and they say there could be ice under the frozen surface of Europa (moon of Jupiter).

There are planets around other stars, and if life can survive anywhere on Earth who knows where it may thrive elseware in the universe.

bigejoe14The question that has plagued me my whole life:

Is there another earth out there just like ours?

In our universe? No.

If by chance a multi-universe theory is correct, than perhaps there is an Earth existing in the same space as ours in "another universe", but in our universe the answer is no.

The evolution of man was so randomly chanced that it would probably be impossible to write the fraction of a percent of a chance that it would have of occuring again.

The earth has existed for 4-6 Billion years, and civilized man for 5,000. There's an unthinkable amount of minute details in those 5,999,995,000 years before man got here that could have changed the entire course of history had they been different. One of the larger ones is obvious...Had whatever killed the dinosaurs (meteor) NOT done so, we would not be here. And there's plenty more, but I won't get into them...

So anyway, the answer is no.

That would be true if evolution was the only factor. But, it isn't. I'm a Christian, so in turn, I beleive in creationism, which is the idea that God created the univers. Since I beleived that God created the univers, there may be another earth like ours. But we just can't be sure right now. I don't know when we will find out. Mabey in 5000 years? Mabe when we all die? Who can say? The earth isn't really that old anyway according to cration. It's only like a couple thousand years old really. So mabey there is another world like ours out there.

So, the answer isn't no anymore. It's, mabey.

Okay, the answer is a little bit more probable if you look at Creation, but still not very for several reasons.

For one, God is creative beyond belief. Just look around you, do you see anything natural that is exactly the same? There's millions of trees on this planet, and they're all different. You could probably make a generalization like "all deer look the same", and that may be true from a human perspective, but they still have differences that make them unique. So with all that creativity, why just create two things exactly the same?

Secondly, it's not in the Bible . It would make sense if the Bible was just from the perspective of the apostles, but the Old Testament isn't. It doesn't say "And on the seventh day he rested...because he still had a whole 'nother planet to create."

Thirdly, even if God did for some reason create two Earths that were exactly the same (Not something the God I think of would do, though, sounds like a competition), they would still end up being different. Why? Because we have free will. It's stressed in the Bible maaaaany many times. We have free will and the ability to decide whether we're going to lead our mortal lives worthy of an after life in heaven. So, what's free will mean? Everybody's going to be different, and make different choices. Heck, maybe God created a second Earth and on that one, Adam and Eve didn't eat the apple. Or maybe just Eve ate it and couldn't convince Adam to do it.

Even with creation, there's still way too many factors.

(Just for the record, I'm a Roman Catholic but I also believe in evolution)

I believe in aliens. Heck, of course the govt would try to cover this up, especially if they have superior technology to the human race. Also, how do any of us know if they've tried to contact us? Maybe they have and we are just too dumb to realize it (crop circles anyone? Stone Henge? Grand Canyon?). Also, sure we can look at these other planets and say they are just full of gas and stuff too, does it mean it is? How do we know that the life forms on their aren't putting that up to throw off any other race, or they don't have some kind of "stealth generator" (I know it's far-fetched, but the United States Military and the Chinese Military both have stealth suit prototypes that allow people to see through them but it's very off-colored so you can ultimately tell something is there.....once again flame me on this one, I know what I've seen). Anyway, anyone that says there is no A.I. anywhere else in this universe is a complete idiot, and should burn lol.

I have heard that aliens might be time travelers from the future, our human future and they are here to stop rips in the time space continuum. Learned that from Tech tv. also I think there was an attempt for a stealth generator or time travel called the Philadelphia Project (spelled wrong) saw that on Spike tv..

There is a pretty good chance there's other life in the Universe. But wouldn't think they have fricken "Flying Saucers".

(Roosevelt incident?)

Maybe they'll even look like Covenant. Sigh

If only we knew.

Though, you have a point. Where do those crop circles come from? Stone Henge was believed to be made by humans before Christ.

If we were ever to contact other life forms, How do you know they wouldn't wage war on us.

I would like to see some other life on a Planet before I pass away.

Hmmm, I love shit like this.

They did exist or will exist and if they are there now we will never know.

The only message we could ever get and receive as information will be so old that were ever it came from will have long gone cold. We look threw out telescopes at places that no longer exist as we see them, the light is too old to see anything we could use. Because its all changed, it

Most of the nebula we see at night no longer exist and have since become planets and suns, but we wont see them for millions of years and would never know what happened because by the time that light reaches us, our own sun would have burned cold.

If an alien, you know the sort, green skin, a few too many eyes, looks threw their telescope at us.

What they would see right now is a small nebula that will form our sun and one day the earth (in just a few million years). They could not know we are here. And we see the same when we look at them. Funny when you think about it. The whole fucking universe could be teeming with life and no would ever know.

If there was a signal, if by chance we do hear anything other then static, all it would be is TV from another world.

beamed out of Germany, and that broadcast showing those nazi soldiers parading back and forth will one day reach another planet, it will be a long while before our real messages get there, and if they are listening, at all, all they can hope for is to find out what we were like, its unlikely we will be around at that time.

Space travel, possible, but think about it, you can only travel to places you know about, after a few thousand light years your maps are wrong, by the time you get even a short way all your information is out of date and you would end up flying in to something nasty. Even if you could rip DBBMaybe they have and we are just to dumb to realize it (crop circlces anyone?Stone Henge? Grand Canyon?).

I can see why you'd say crop cricles and stone henge...

But the Grand Canyon? Why the hell do you say the Grand Canyon was made by aliens as a message to us? Have you ever heard of glaciers, and erosion? The Grand Canyon was made naturally.

sjezk3lol i got a question what do u think is most Belivable God Or Aliens? im not tryin to take the piss just curious

Which is more believable?

That in the billions of galaxies, which each have billions of solar systems, that there is at least one other planet with an atmosphere that can sustain life and has life?

Or, that there is a mystical being that has super magical powers and made up the universe and every last thing in it?

Aliens, definately. And we're not just talking about the kind that can zip right on over here and take over earth, but any intelligent life forms, they could be unevolved fish like squid.

As for the existance of aliens, I'd say that some sort of life is out there, intelligent or not, carbon based or not, the universe is too big for something not to have developed.

TheGunrunThink we will make contact in our life time?

No. It would take billions of years for a signal to reach them, than billions of years for their signal to get back to us.

Plus, there is an enormous chance that they would not be able to even decode our messages. They might be receiving our transmissions, but they would most likely not have the right machines to decode it to be of any use. The same thing for us, they might be sending messages using a method that we have no means to decode, they might be trying to contact other life in the universe, but we just don't know it.

Plus, they might not even be advanced enough to receive anything like transmissions.
