I got some stuff on SATA, if you remember the flaming that I got involved in weather SATA was faster than PATA. I'll see if I can find it. I also had some stuuf on RAID configurations. I repair and build PC's in my spare time so I may be able to help you out on some things. The thing is I don't tend to write down much - never needed to.

So, what you're saying is, you want to run a website about PC repair, but you want someone to design the site and someone else to write the content... what does that leave you?

God damn DNS server. My ISP is being annoying atm and even google doesn't work. These forums seem to work though but I'm seeing a lot of missing images in peoples sigs and stuff.

Well...I'm an A+ (certified 5 years ago), MCSE (NT, 2k), MCP+I, MCT, CCNA, CCNP, CCDA, and CCDP, along with a few other things.

I'm into hardware as well and I also do development (VB, VB.NET, other MS languages, obviously HTML, some PHP, some Java), plus software and when I have time, gaming. Also I have an interest in electronic stuff in general, so I'm into things like robotics as well.

I've been in in the field for a while (at least relative to my age   ), but it's only a hobby

On topic though, I wouldn't be able to help out in posting news - I'm actually looking for people to post news or contribute to TechAutos (my new site, launched in March, focusing on computers/technology as well as cars, my other hobby   ). Even if you can't contribute much, please visit and register (free of course), post on the forums, or whatever you want.
