I need to find out how many dot's are in George Seurat's painting "Sunday Afternoon on the Island of la Grande Jatte" A friend of mine is taking a french language course and they need to find this out, but they couldnt find it so they turned to me, the computer whiz so they think. I can't find it either Was wondering if anyone here knew off hand or knew a place to find it or even wanted to help me look. Thanks anywhodle!

Um... Hotwire! <---- Now it's On topic.

Well, I mean it WAS a new painting technique using dots on the canvas instead of strokes.. but there would litereally be millions of them, and I seriously doubt that he counted them as he applied them..

So, I'm just assuming it's a play on words that they're asking for.

LoL that's awesome and it does make sense but I'm afraid I just told her and she said the teacher said it was in the millions so I am thinking it must be actual tiny dots.

I'm curious to find out what the accepted answer is then, because it can't logically be anything more than a guess.

Ya that's what I thought, Who'd sit there and count them unless it was done by computer... That's why I'm trying to convince her the teacher meant the woman dot.
