It was created by Sir Phoenixx, textured by Darkblade, and as usual the treads and minor overhauls were done by me. It's simply beautiful, for a huge mechanical beast.

Armament includes 120mm HEAT rounds (High Explosive Anti Tank, basically uses compressed plasma from the detonation to drill through the armor of a tank, a shaped charge, this is why C4 doesn't damage tanks much, if at all, in real life.) and 77mm Mammoth Tusk missiles, capable of attaking both air and land targets, heat seeking.

Matt2405 And nice skin
You know Aircraftkiller doesn't like somebody calling textures as skins?

England, man, you have some serious talent. Will you be releasing the C&C: Paintegade mod any time soon? Here, I can even contribute an Orca model I just finished: http://www.freewebs.com/x2mrpirate/orca.JPG

Do you mean the whole tank was remoddled from scratch? If so, why when you could have used the Renegade mammy.

gj either way.

Because the Renegade Mammoth Tank has very little detail and is generally an ugly thing compared to what Phoenixx made.

Why use something bad when you can make something better?

Is it pathetic that I think an MS Paint mod would be funny as shit to actually see? And with so few polygons we'll all get huge FPS.

Reborn's Chameleon Spy's hands are drawn with Paint. Or it just seems like that. (This is just a remark, not an invitation for Reborn bashing)

Wow! That's some work. Looks a hundred times better than the Renegade Mammy. Certainly, I thought the Renegade Mammy was a bit ugly myself but this one's really nice to look at. Besides, big tanks look better in black.

The real question is: Why didn't Westwood make a mammoth tank that pretty the first time around?

Oh yeah, cuz EA sucks.

There was no Mammoth Mark 2 in TD, therefore it was only a Mammoth Tank.
